

WASHINGTON ROARS ACCLAIM TO ROYALTY; PRESIDENT, KING VOICE HOPE FOR PEACE

In a smiling and gala procession, King George of England and President Roosevelt ride down Pennsylvania avenue from Washington's Union Station. To the thousands lining the sidewalks and crowding windows, the King and his host appeared to be cracking jokes, their animated conversation continuing during most of the procession. The King is uniformed as an admiral of the British navy. The hot uniform drew expressions of sympathy from the crowd, who braved a steaming day to greet the British ruler and his queen.

QUEEN ELIZABETH MAKES GREAT HIT WITH THOUSANDS

Dazzling Welcome Is Complete With 21-Gun Salute, Garden Party and State Dinner; Crowd Marvels at Splendor of King's Uniform and at Vivid Complexion of His Queen.

WASHINGTON, June 8.—(AP)—From opposite sides of a festive horseshoe table, gleaming with white napery, gold plate and fine china, King George VI and President Roosevelt exchanged toasts tonight, with mutual expressions of hope for a peaceful world in years to come.

A state dinner, climax of the first day of the stay of George and Queen Elizabeth in the capital—a day filled with rushing activity, of receiving the unstinted cheers of the humble folk, of sightseeing, and an elaborate garden party at the British embassy—furnished occasion for the toast-making.

Bonds of Friendship.

The President, seated, at the outside of the curve in the horseshoe, with Queen Elizabeth beside him, arose from his place. The arrival of the British sovereigns was a fitting occasion for festivities, he said, but also called for "thanks for the bonds of friendship between our two nations."

The King, seated opposite the President with Mrs. Roosevelt, said both he and the Queen were "deeply touched" at the reception and expected to enjoy "every minute" of their remaining time in the United States.

He ended his response in close harmony with the President's toast, hoping "that our great nations may ever in the future walk together along a path of friendship in a world of peace."

Capital Hails Royalty.

Earlier, the capital had taken the King and Queen to its heart with a vast display of enthusiasm.

Crowds, dense crowds, sweltering under a glaring sun, gave the royal couple an enthusiastic welcome from the moment they left Union station to begin the whirlwind program so minutely planned for them.

But, before that, they had met President and Mrs. Roosevelt. Standing in the presidential reception room, at the station, King and President, with a particularly hearty handclasp, symbolically sealed a bond of international friendship.

Avenue Packed.

Plain folks packed along Pennsylvania avenue, as the procession majestically made its way to the White House, gasped at the resplendency of the King's uniform. They worried out loud about how he was standing the heat under all the fabric, gold braid and medals. And they murmured approvingly of Elizabeth.

She, in fact, was the hit of the day. The phrase, "Her pictures don't do her justice," followed the royal party wherever it went, as the spectators noted the fresh, vivid color and snapping blue eyes, and the gracious manner which the camera fails to record.

See the Sights.

And later, after meeting all the diplomats in Washington, and lunching intimately with the Roosevelt family, the royal visitors, dressed more in keeping with the weather, set out to see the sights, and found additional cheering thousands lining their way.

Their sight-seeing trip took them to the Lincoln Memorial—where the King, unconscious of the President's gesture toward the statue of Lincoln, gazed instead at the tall pointed shaft of the Washington monument—through cool, woody Rock Creek park and to the National (Episcopal) cathedral.

At the cathedral there was a disappointed churchman. Robed and ready, Bishop James E. Freeman waited an hour or more to receive the royal visitors. Word came at last that they had driven to the outside of the cathedral grounds some time before and gone on instead of entering.

To Garden Party.

Back to the White House and a fast change of clothing—with more crowds along the way—the route led, and thence to the garden party at Washington's "Four Acres of England," the British embassy. Although the early afternoon had brought showers to several points in the city, the embassy had been spared.

To see them there, some 1,400 of Washington's social and official elite, elaborately gowned and garbed, flocked to the embassy. Countless others were bitterly disappointed because they received no invitations.

Washington's most important question, whether dresses should be short or long, whether the gentlemen should turn out in formal afternoon garb or cool summer linens, was answered as the individuals chose. There was an abundance of both in the throng that strolled over the fresh green lawns.

Historic Moment.

The President's son, James, created a stir with his arrival, impeccably clad in gray cutaway, trousers to match and a gray top hat. His brothers, Elliott and Franklin Jr., wore dark cutaways.

For the garden party, Queen Elizabeth chose, and was a striking picture in a white organza gown, hand-tucked from shoulder to hem in graduated widths and inset with panels of fine lace. She wore a large white picture hat with a small knot of flowers and carried a dainty ruffled white parasol. For jewelry she wore a diamond bracelet, a three-strand pearl necklace and pearl earrings. The King, donning his third outfit of the day—with one more change, to evening clothes, still to come, was turned out in traditional gray cutaway, with pearl grey topper.

Behind Schedule.

The guests at the embassy waited 15 minutes longer than they had expected for their first glimpse of the royal pair. At 3:15, a quarter hour behind schedule, they appeared on the garden terrace. They paused there briefly to shake hands with Vice President Garner and Mrs. Garner, and then, separating, began a leisurely stroll through the garden.

As they approached, the guests fell back to open two wide lanes. From time to time, Lady Lindsay, the wife of the British ambassador, accompanying the Queen, would summon a guest to be presented to

'Doc' Hiram Evans To Quit As Klan Chief at Meeting

Ku Klux Imperial Wizard Will End 10-Year Reign Today; Hooded Order Is Planning Drive for Money and Americanism.

By LAMAR Q. BALL.

Some time today the super-gaudy sheet which for ten years has identified Hiram Wesley Evans as imperial wizard of the Ku Klux Klan will be slipped off his super-portly frame and dropped hopefully over the head of one of the boys more gifted in the wizardry of dragging in the dough. The simple ceremony will mark the end of "Doc" Evans' reign as the brains of an order suffering from an anemia of ideas that even the sheets can't cover.

Grand dragons were assembling in Atlanta last night for a three-day session at which they hope to work out a method of making Americanism more profitable for grand dragons. The assembling was limited, however, to grand dragons able to dig up the carfare. Those able to get here in time for the pre-convention caucuses were far from enthusiastic over the type of Americanism that is floating around this country today. People get mad, it was agreed, but not mad enough to cough up ten measly bucks for an initiation and, after all, that is the real test of their sincerity as far as the Klan is concerned.

Country in Mess.

This country, according to the Klan, is in one awful mess; so awful, in fact, that even the conservative Doctor Evans was suggesting to newspapermen last night that they hurry out to the Oakland City lodge, put ten dollars on the line, have themselves initiated and walk in on today's secret convention sessions as bona fide Klansmen with the paid-up right of getting the inside facts at first hand.

Today's sessions will be secret, but the Klan, according to Evans, is willing to waive technicalities for those 10 magic dollars. There will be no courtesy cards for the press. The Klan, it seems, is on the verge of what the Klan probably will call klankruptcy.

Thousands of nightgowns, selling at $10 a copy, according to economists, will save almost any dress goods business from klankruptcy to say nothing of the stimulation that such sales would bring to the textile industry as a whole. The Klan is convinced it has a sound idea up to that point, the only weakness in the idea is how to get it working.

Prejudice Symposium.

Today's opening session will be dedicated to a symposium on sub-surface prejudices, simmering in the American mind but capable of being worked to a boiling pitch. On the fruits of that symposium rests the selection of Wizard Evans' successor.

Yesterday, the Klan leaders spent in restless planning.

At Dr. Evans' offices in the Hurt building, he was in to no one. His daughter greeted all callers, answered all telephones. The doctor was locked in a secret klavern somewhere, answering the phone only when his daughter thought it important enough to disturb him. "The report is around that Sam Green (grand dragon of the Georgia Klan) is saying he is going to toss you out tomorrow," Doctor Evans was told.

"He's going to do no such thing," the doctor retorted indignantly. Continued in Page 13, Column 4.

CZECHS FEEL NAZI WRATH IN SLAYING

Von Neurath Clamps Iron Rule in Town After German Officer Dies.

By The Associated Press.

The slaying of a German policeman in Bohemia-Moravia brought stern measures yesterday (Thursday) from Nazi officials already confronted with growing "passive resistance" among restive Czechs recently brought under their rule.

This development in the protectorate Germany carved out of former Czechoslovakia came during a day in which Great Britain served notice on the "men who have it in their power to precipitate conflict" that any future attempt at aggression would "meet with wide and resolute resistance."

The British position was stated by Foreign Secretary, Viscount Halifax who declared "the day has gone when the independence of European nations can be destroyed by unilateral action."

The stringent measures Germany ordered in Bohemia-Moravia in an effort to find the slayer of the policeman shot to death early yesterday in the district of Kladno, included:

1. A ban on all open air meetings, the closing of all theaters, public houses and several schools "because of the agitating activity of a greater part of the faculties."
 2. An order that all house windows and doors remain locked from 10 p. m. to 5 a. m., under threat that guards would shoot into open windows.
 3. Removal of the mayor of Kladno and other city officials and the introduction of a government commissar to govern the city.
 4. The removal of the arms of the present Czech state police for failure to "fulfill their duty."
- Konstantin Von Neurath, Reich's protector for Bohemia-Moravia, announced further measures would be in order if the slayer were not caught by tonight.

MILL WAGE RATE CALLED JOB PERIL

32 1-2-Cent Minimum To Throw 25,000 Out of Work, Georgian Warns.

Immediate establishment of a 32 1/2-cent minimum wage rate for cotton mills of the south will result in the possible displacement of between 25,000 and 30,000 workers, R. O. Arnold, of Covington, president of the Cotton Manufacturers' Association of Georgia, told cotton mill men who met in Atlanta yesterday to prepare for a hearing called by Wage-Hour Administrator Andrews for Atlanta June 26.

Arnold said a survey had been made by the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association of 60 per cent of the spindles in the south, and that the results showed there would be a displacement of 12,000 to 15,000 workers. This figure, he said, probably will be increased to at least 25,000 when the survey is completed.

Many of the mills will have to close under the new minimum wage, Arnold pointed out. And a large number of these, he added, furnish the only industrial pay roll in the small towns and isolated communities in which they are situated. Such a condition naturally would affect the social and economic areas in which the closings occur, it was pointed out.

Another survey shows that 96 per cent of the cotton mill men of the south are opposed to the minimum wage, which was recommended by industrial committee No. 1, Arnold said.

Opposition of the cotton mill men to the recommendation is not a selfish motive, Arnold asserted, but is prompted by a desire to prevent social and economic chaos that would follow in many communities.

Jury Will Probe Charges North Atlanta Is Speedtrap

Inquiry To Be Launched Today; Subpoena Served on Dr. Arthur S. Libby, Mayor of Village, Who Says He'll Be Glad to Appear With Records.

Investigation of charges that North Atlanta is a speed trap for motorists on Peachtree road and that cases have been made without cause will be launched at 9 o'clock this morning by the DeKalb county grand jury, of which Mell Turner, DeKalb legislator, is foreman.

A subpoena duces tecum, summoning the official records of the small, incorporated town in DeKalb county, was prepared by Solicitor General Roy C. Leathers yesterday afternoon for service upon Dr. Arthur S. Libby, president of the Libby Graduate School of Accounting and Finance here, who has been North Atlanta's mayor since it was founded in 1924.

Dr. Libby was served the subpoena last night and declared he would be glad to go before the grand jury.

The subpoena called for the mayor to appear with records of cash bonds and forfeitures on traffic cases for the last three years and also to produce the records of all cases made by North Atlanta's two full-time and one part-time policemen.

Leathers, reluctant to talk about the investigation last night, admitted that many persons had charged they were arrested in North Atlanta for no reason and required to put up small cash bonds. These bonds, it was said, were usually forfeited without an appearance before Mayor Libby, who also serves his 700-population suburban community as recorder of the city court.

In fact, Dr. Libby said only a few cases had been entered in his court for speeding in the last six months, but he did say a small number of cases were made recently at a stop sign on Peachtree road in Brookhaven, a part of the suburb.

Motorists, he said, disregarded the stop sign immediately in front of a dangerous curve and officers had been ordered to enforce the law.

"We have only tried to enforce our laws for the protection of the public just as you in Atlanta have enforced your 25-mile-per-hour speed limit," the mayor said.

"A few years ago there was some talk about our town being a speed trap, but it was not true," Dr. Libby asserted. "Do you realize that there have been four bad wrecks right here on our stretch of the road in the past month or so? And I'm not talking about the one last week in which two persons were killed and another seriously injured, because that happened just outside our limits."

PRIZE-WINNING RECIPES FOR THIS WEEK

Sliced Cucumber Rings from Mrs. W. L. Wilkerson, Rockmart, Ga., Rt. 1.

16 large cucumbers
2 oz. stick cinnamon
1 oz. whole cloves
2 lbs. sugar
1-2 teaspoon salt
1 quart vinegar

Slice cucumbers 1-4 inch thick, scald in 2 qts. water to which has been added 4 tablespoons salt. Drain and simmer in clear water until tender, but firm. Put spices and sugar in vinegar and boil for five minutes. Pour over cucumber rings and seal.

Stuffed Eggplant from Mrs. H. Benning, 169 Gordon Terrace, S. W., Atlanta.

1 medium sized eggplant
1 cup raw mushrooms
1-2 cup chopped onion
1 cup minced ham
1 tablespoon butter
1-4 teaspoon salt
1-8 teaspoon pepper

Cut eggplant in half lengthwise; scoop out meat and put in mixing bowl. Next peel the mushrooms and chop. Mix together with the eggplant and saute in butter with the onion for 10 minutes. Add ham and other seasonings, stir together well and fill eggplant shells. Sprinkle the tops with buttered bread crumbs and bake for about 20 minutes.

Spongi from Mrs. Louise Allen, 1402 Fairbanks St., S. W., Atlanta.

1 can corned beef hash
Firm tomatoes
Mustard

Open can of corned beef hash and make slices of it about 1 inch thick. Arrange them on a flat pan. Salt and pepper to taste, and spread over each slice a thin coating of mustard. Cut thick slices of tomato and lay over the mustard. Run into oven or under broiler flame just long enough for it to brown.

Men never understand why women like recipes and why they seemingly never tire of collecting them, trying them, clipping and filing them. "Why, Mary is a good cook," I've heard a man say, "but she's always looking for recipes. She's got more than she ever will use, and she's always reading and clipping more!"

Cooking and feeding her family and most important of all, her man, is a woman's principal job. To keep that job ever from becoming tiresome and her meals uninteresting and monotonous, the wise woman reads about foods, new and old, and she studies the subject just as her husband studies markets, buying trends and such things to keep abreast in his own field.

But though the business of cookery and it's mysteries is little understood by most men. Fortunately they let us alone to look and keep on looking for bright, new ideas to set before his majesty the king of the household.

Warm weather brings an absolute necessity for changing meals in order to get lightness and sparkle into them, because heat causes appetites to wilt. I am passing along to you some suggestions for warm weather meals, particularly breakfasts, because breakfast is a meal often neglected and quite likely to become uninteresting because of sameness.

Crown Roast Looks Regal, Is Easy To Carve, Serve

A crown roast of lamb is prepared by your butcher from the rib section, shaped into a circle with ribs pointing out. This leaves center free for dressing or other filling such as vegetables. A crown roast is much easier than it looks, and affords ample opportunity for the housewife to use her ingenuity in decorating it. Portions are carved between the ribs.

By SALLY SAVER.

Lamb is one of the lighter meats and is especially suitable for the main course of a hot weather dinner. Lamb chops always are acceptable, and leg of lamb, of course, but all too few cooks feel they are equal to preparing that legal-looking platter upon which rests a crown roast of lamb.

It does look hard and complicated; actually a crown roast is as easy as easier than broiling lamb chops—you simply can't miss. In the first place when you ask your butcher for a crown roast, he does all the fixing for you. All you have to do is to place the roast on a rack and cook it exactly as you would any other roast. The center can be filled with dressing, or not, as you choose, and when the roast is cooked you can decorate it to your heart's content.

The crown roast is cooked in a slow oven, in an uncovered pan. If a dressing is placed in the center, the meat is placed on a rack in the pan, and the rib ends should be wrapped to prevent charring. If, however, the center is to be filled with vegetables, such as a whole cauliflower, which will be cooked separately, then place your crown roast in the pan with the rib ends down, to form a rack. The fat, as it melts, will keep the ribs from burning.

The rib ends are to be decorated before the roast is served. Paper frills, either white or pastel colored, are usually used, but tiny carrots, olives, little apples, radishes or any other suitable vegetable or fruit may be used.

A crown roast is easily carved and served. Cut between each rib and serve a portion of dressing with each chop.

Here are directions for preparing a crown roast of lamb, with a very tasty dressing.

Crown Roast of Lamb
Lamb crown

2 cups dry bread crumbs
1-2 cup chopped celery
1-2 cup button mushrooms and stock
2 tablespoons grated onion
4 tablespoons butter
Salt and pepper
Bacon or salt pork slices

Have the crown prepared at market. Wrap rib ends with bacon or salt pork slices to prevent charring. Place crown right side up on rack in an open roasting pan. Combine other ingredients for a stuffing. Fill the crown with the stuffing. Roast until done, allowing 30 to 35 minutes per pound. To serve, remove salt pork from rib ends and replace with hollowed carrot sections. Stick parsley sprig in each carrot top. Garnish with sliced tomatoes and watercress.

Iced coffee as a summer beverage is unsurpassed. Make a strong brew with a full-bodied coffee, pour it over a glassful of ice cubes and serve with plenty of cream and sugar. It's a fine way to get the stimulation of coffee and a long, cooling drink at the same time.

LIONS CLUB ELECTS.

COLUMBUS, Ga., June 8.—The Phenix City Lions Club has elected Dr. M. L. Shaddix as president, and Ralph Raiford, Leland Jones and R. L. Ray as vice presidents. Other officers include J. Y. LIBRARY DELEGATES WILL VISIT ALASKA

Tour Tied in With National Convention in San Francisco June 18-25.

Three representatives of the Carnegie Library in Atlanta will attend the annual meeting of the American Library Association in San Francisco, June 18-25, in connection with a five-week tour of the western section of the United States and Alaska.

The Atlanta delegates are Misses Isabel Erlich, Mary Thompson and Ann Wimbish. They will be accompanied by Miss Celeste Threl, of Toccoa.

Members of the party will go first to St. Louis to join the tour. From there they will go to Los Angeles, then to San Francisco for the convention, and then to Vancouver. After a nine-day cruise to Alaska they will come back to Seattle and return to Atlanta through the Ranier National Park. While in Los Angeles they hope to see the filming of "Gone With the Wind."

LEGION SAFETY DRIVE.

LAGRANGE, Ga., June 8.—Baxter L. Schaub post, American Legion, adopting the slogan, "Keep Fit to Drive," had today launched an expansive safety campaign which will emphasize the need of preventing accidents to children.

RURAL EDUCATION PLAN IS EXPLAINED

Experiments at West Georgia College Attracting Southwide Attention.

Experiments in rural education at West Georgia College in Carrollton are attracting south-wide attention, President I. S. Ingram said last night in the Board of Regents sponsored Forward Georgia radio program.

Information drawn from a study of rural northwest Georgia has been compiled and used in an effort to give teacher and students an idea of the problems of the area, and their probable solutions. "Effective leadership in all phases of life peculiar to this area is desired," Ingram said.

Results of Study.
The study of the section showed 1,200 teachers in service with merely a high school education or less. School buildings were neglected, and there seemed to be no relation between the school and the community. New teachers followed the old formal methods in teaching subject matter in no way related to the community.

To help solve some of the problems, two rural settlements were taken over by the college to supplement conventional teacher-training courses. In that way, Ingram said, the college can demonstrate the building of a curriculum around every-day problems. The plan has been followed with the co-operation of the college, the Carroll county board of education, and the Jeanes Foundation.

This summer, with the co-operation of the Farm Security Administration, the Board of Regents and the Rosenwald Fund, conventional credits will be offered for unconventional summer school work, in an attempt to take up even more of the slack between what a teacher is taught in school and what he should know for the benefit of the community in which he teaches.

Fifteen summer school students, teachers in Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana and other southern states, and 15 members of the education staff of the FSA will spend six weeks at West Georgia College, working side by side in Georgia fields, in college classrooms and in Georgia settlements. Ignoring teacher-training textbooks, the 30 will make a field study of rural problems, swap information around the conference table, and as far as possible live with the problems of the persons they will teach again in the fall.

ALCATRAZ TERMED PLACE OF HORROR

Better Way to Handle Prisoners Sought by Attorney General.

WASHINGTON, June 8.—(AP) Attorney General Murphy, describing Alcatraz prison as "that place of horror," said yesterday he was hunting for a better way to handle prisoners there.

He is dissatisfied, he told his press conference, with what he called the "bad" psychology bred at Alcatraz.

"It is sinister and vicious. I think it is a great injustice to both the prisoners and to San Francisco. It is not proper" to have that place of horror on a rock on the doorstep of San Francisco.

A reporter asked whether Murphy, on his recent visit to the federal penitentiary at Alcatraz, had seen any evidence of prisoners going "stir crazy."

"There is more evidence of it than elsewhere," he said.

The attorney general cautioned reporters against thinking in the light of his remarks, that "Alcatraz is all over with."

"It is necessary to have severely administered methods to break up a Leavenworth and Atlanta and other places the crowd that aspires to escape or kill. They have to be broken up and sent away."

A Queen Meets a President---and the Queen and First Lady Enjoy Their Ride in Washington Procession

This unusual expression picture of President Roosevelt and Queen Elizabeth of England was made as they met in Washington's Union station yesterday.

Queen Elizabeth and Mrs. Roosevelt are gay as they ride toward the White House in the historic Washington procession. The Queen, cool despite the beating sun, held up a dainty parasol to beat off the hot rays, an act which caused bitter disappointment among those who paid to watch the spectacle from upper windows along the route.

her majesty. Sir Ronald Lindsay acted in the same capacity with the King.

In all, King George met some 150 people, among them Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, with whom he chatted for five minutes. Mrs. Vanderbilt waved a gold fan as she talked.

The royal stroll also answered another burning Washington question: To curtsy before the Queen or not? Mostly it was answered in the affirmative. Most of those presented dropped a curtsy to her majesty and there were, in addition, numerous bobbing picture hats among the guests as the Queen passed by.

Returning to the terrace, their majesties had tea with J. P. Morgan, the banker, and Mr. and Mrs. Garner.

A historic moment came soon after the King's arrival in Washington, with his presentation to the President.

They stood, this gaily uniformed monarch out of an Old World, and this chief executive of a people traditionally disdainful of royal trappings, beneath the high, arched marble ceiling of the presidential waiting room at Union station here.

Outside, in the sooty gloom of the train shed, marines and blue-jackets, who had formed a stiffly erect guard from train to reception room, were breaking ranks. Toward the sunlight, in the other direction, thousands of soldiers and sailors were coming to attention for one of the most dazzling military spectacles this capital has ever seen.

Behind rigid steel curbstone cables, stretching two miles to the White House, more than 400-100 ordinary folk—government clerks, store employees, housewives and others—stood awaiting the opportunity to shout their own humble welcome.

About the two leaders of two great peoples were gathered an official reception committee in somber morning coats, and the members of the royal party, the lords and ladies in waiting, the equestrians and secretaries, in uniforms gleaming with gold braid.

Secretary Hull, who rehearsed his part on the spot several days ago, made the presentation.

"Mr. President," he said, "their Britannic Majesties."

"Well, at last, I greet you," the President beamed. "We welcome you to our country. We are happy to have you here."

Gracious Royalty.

"It is indeed a pleasure for her majesty and myself to be here," the King responded.

Then Queen Elizabeth, chic in a tailored suit of sheer mauve with a bolero jacket and a small off-the-face hat of mauve felt, met the President, and then both met the first lady of the land, Mrs. Roosevelt, dressed in blue wool.

After these introductions, the four stood shoulder to shoulder, the President first, the King at his right, Queen Elizabeth next and then Mrs. Roosevelt, while members of the President's party, the entourage of the royal couple, and several diplomats were presented.

Many of the men bowed stiffly from the hips, and again bent low over the hand of the Queen. Some of the ladies from the foreign diplomatic set dipped a graceful little curtsy to Her Royal Highness, though protocol did not require it.

For each, as he or she passed, Elizabeth had a nod, a word and a smile as spontaneous and charming as though she had not met countless hundreds in recent weeks with the same warm greeting. A favored few she detained for a moment's chat.

The ceremonies took place in the big octagonal room which the architect of the Union station had the foresight to include in a railroad station at the nation's capital. It was banked with flowers—red gladioli, white foxglove and blue iris. The marble floors were covered with thick blue rugs, and mahogany chairs upholstered in blue leather completed the chamber's appointments.

Hitch in Program.

The greetings and presentations took much less than the 45 minutes that had been allotted to them, and this caused a fleeting hitch in a program that had been laid out minute by minute. After a pause, although hardly an awkward one, the President turned to Brigadier General Edwin Watson, his military aide, and with the King started for the door. And Mrs. Roosevelt tucked a friendly arm briefly about her majesty's back and turned her, too, toward the door.

Outside, their majesties had their first taste of how hot a hot Washington day can be. The sun poured down, Union Jacks and the Stars and Stripes hung listlessly at their staffs. (The weatherman said it was 92 in the shade on the street and much warmer in the sun.)

Under the portico, strips of 10-cent adhesive tape had been fixed to the marble, to show where the party should stand for photographers. As they took their station, the marine band played the first strains of "God Save the King," and the King whipped his hand to a stiff salute. Afterward came the Star-Spangled Banner, and again the King saluted.

21-Gun Salute.

As the last strains of the national anthem died away, the first booming report of a 21-gun salute made the station windows rattle. At the fourteenth gun, the King, the President, and General Watson climbed into a long black limousine with top down, and the Queen and Mrs. Roosevelt entered the car behind it. The machines whisked away from the station at a fast clip that caught the secret service by surprise. But a split second later these guardians of the President and his guests wheeled out at an even faster gait.

The speed with which the procession to the White House began was not long maintained, however. After a hundred yards it slowed to a walking pace. Secret service men sauntered along beside the two automobiles, flanked, themselves, as well as preceded, by motorcycle policemen. Army janks, and cavalry in abundance completed the procession.

Horse Rears.

One cavalryman's horse, frightened at all the hubbub, wheeled and reared high in the air not ten feet from King George. An officer spurred his mount between the rearing horse and his majesty, so quickly that the latter was not even aware of his danger.

Two unbroken lines of blue jackets, marines, and soldiers, some of them in the army's new slate-blue dress uniform, extended from the station to the capitol and thence to the White House.

Behind these lines, police thought there were at least 400,000 and possibly nearly 600,000 (almost the normal population of the city). Many had been waiting since dawn. Ambulances were busy with heat prostration cases and one man died.

Shouts and cheers which began outside Union station ran slowly, by waves and gusts, up Pennsylvania avenue as the party slowly traversed that historic "boulevard of parades." There was no mistaking the firm friendliness of the throng, its enthusiasm, its eagerness to make the royal visitors welcome.

Themselves sweltering steamily along the sidewalks, many spectators expressed sympathy for the King, bundled up in his uniform of an admirer of the fleet, with a cocked beplumed "fore and aft hat," as the men of the navy call them. Across his chest were strung a multitude of medals and decorations and a wide silk sash was draped from shoulder to waist.

Elizabeth Cool.

Despite the beating sun, Elizabeth looked prettily cool and comfortable under a dainty grey parasol, which she unfurled at her first intimation of the warmth of the day, and kept unfolded until the procession passed beneath the spreading elms of Treasury Place, a scant hundred yards from the entrance to the White House grounds.

It was a smiling procession. To the onlooker it seemed that the President and the King might be cracking a succession of jokes, between handwaves from the one and salutes from the other, to the crowds. At any rate, they were

Ants all around the Garbage Can?

Here's how to get rid of them. First, keep garbage pail tightly lidded at all times. Second, get a can of Bee Brand Insect Powder. Sprinkle it liberally under and around the can on the ground or floor. Build powder barriers around ant holes, wherever they are found, and across the path where the ants travel to and from the garbage can. As ants crawl through such barriers, they will pick up enough killing particles to kill them. Repeat these powder treatments at regular intervals—and you'll soon be rid of ants.

Bee Brand really kills ants, roaches and other crawling insects quick—yet it's entirely safe to use around the house. Inset on the genuine Bee Brand Insect Powder—in the red and yellow cans. It's sold with a guarantee of satisfaction or your money back.

NOTE: You can also kill ants and roaches, as well as flies and mosquitoes, with Bee Brand Insect Spray. Read directions on can.

I KNOW FOUR ROSES IS ALL WHISKEY
AT LEAST 4 YEARS OLD — IS THAT WHY
YOU SAY IT'S AMERICA'S FINEST WHISKEY?

AGE IS MIGHTY IMPORTANT, BILL—
BUT IT'S ONLY ONE OF 5 REASONS
WHY FOUR ROSES IS TOPS!

DO YOU KNOW

- 1 Aging improves a good whiskey, but it can't make a poor whiskey good. So all the whiskeys that go into Four Roses are outstandingly good to start with.
- 2 All of them are at least 4 years old—old enough to be bottled in bond. And they would be bottled in bond, if we thought they would be as good, sold separately that way.
- 3 But our 74 years' experience has taught us that the finest whiskey is made by combining several of our whiskeys into one whiskey that's finer still.
- 4 Then we purposely make Four Roses lighter and milder, by reducing it to 90 proof (instead of the stronger 100 proof which bottled-in-bond whiskeys must be).
- 5 Four Roses is ALL whiskey—with the mellowness of age, and the greatness that only generations of distilling skill can give. Compare it with any other whiskey made.

BRITISH SIP BEER AND READ OF KING

London Papers Feature Such Angles as American Yelling "Hi Ya."

LONDON, June 8.—(AP)—The peripatetic British householder drained his evening pint of bitter (beer) with great deliberation to-night and, amid interludes to fan himself, read aloud long descriptions of the welcome for his King and Queen in Washington.

He needed his fan less than he had for the last few days, but there still was a protracted "heat wave" of temperatures approaching 80 degrees—almost as rare in England as the absence of the monarch from the traditional trooping the color.

Clarify Idiom.

British newspapers virtually had to add glossaries to some of their dispatches from the United States to clarify idiom from across the Atlantic.

Station crews at Buffalo became "car loaders" and points where highways cross railroad tracks were identified as "level crossings." The dispatches often had a member of a crowd brashly shouting "Hi ya King!"

Some newspapers' headlines displayed "Big police guard" for the King and Queen on their first day in the United States and others used estimates of from 600,000 to 1,000,000 for the throngs that welcomed them to the American capital.

"Two Old Friends."

Still others gave prominence to the hot box which delayed the pilot train accompanying the royal train. The hot box was called an overheated axle.

Display pages in later editions bore such streamer headlines as "Roosevelt Greets the King" and stressed a description of the meeting as "just like the meeting of two old friends."

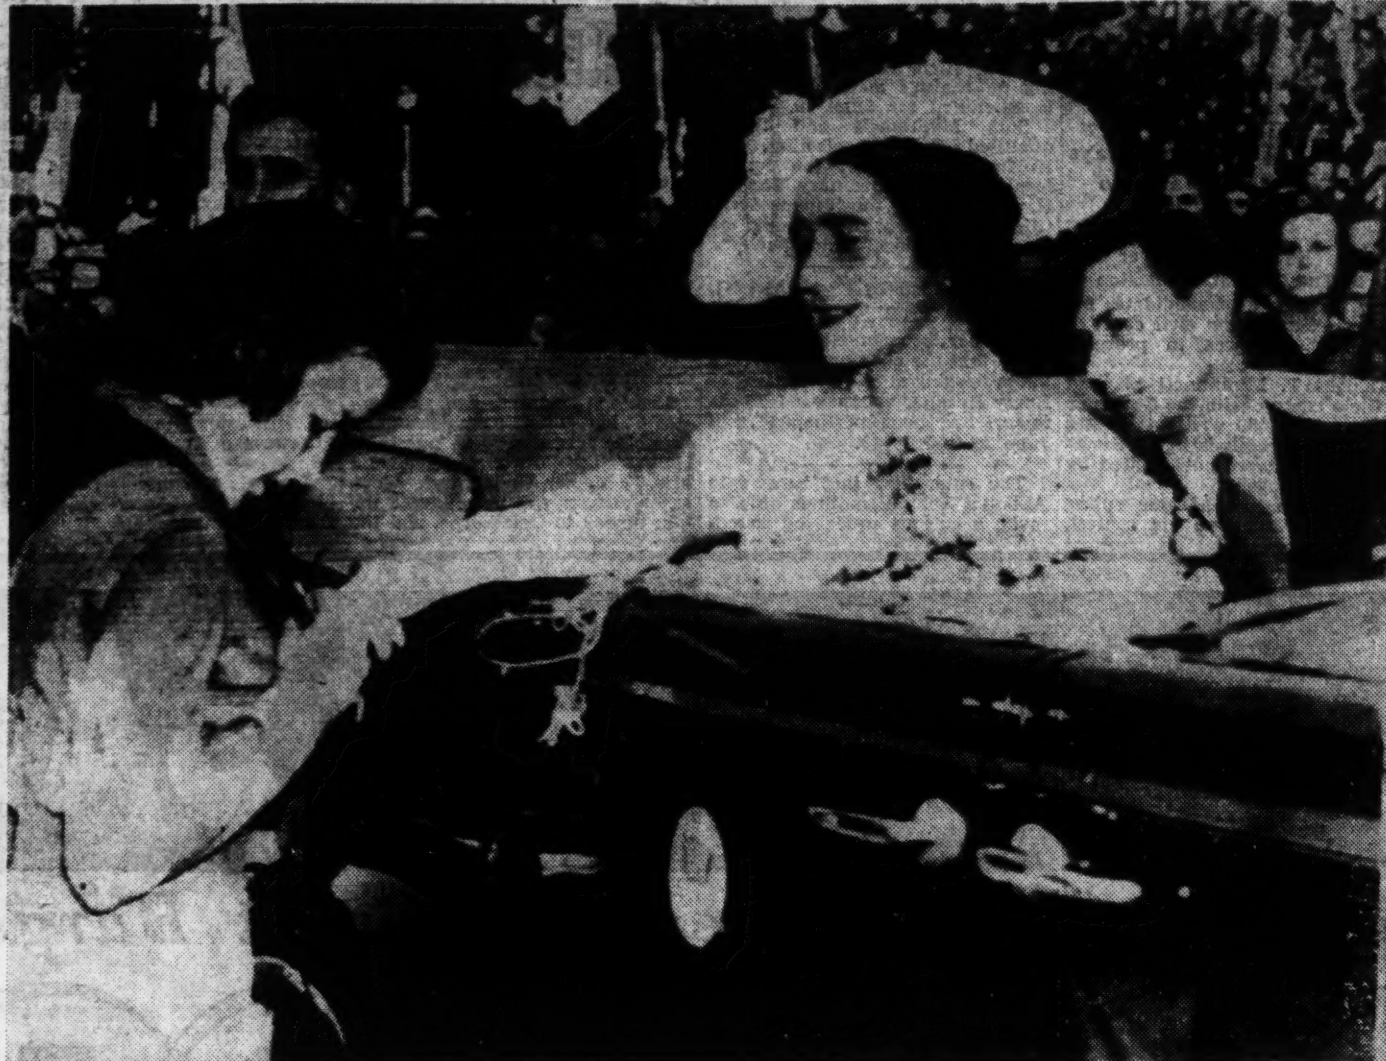

It far outshone all other stories that had absorbed British attention, included the Thetis disaster, Queen Mary's first public appearance after the automobile accident May 23 in which she was injured, and negotiations with Soviet Russia.

EASTMAN TO BECOME ICC HEAD ON JULY 1

WASHINGTON, June 8.—(AP)—Joseph B. Eastman, former railroad co-ordinator, will become chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission July 1 under a new plan whereby he will serve a three-year term.

The commission announced today that Eastman, 57 years old, had been elected unanimously by his fellow commissioners.

engaged in an animated conversation over most of the route, in which General Watson, the only other occupant of the limousine, occasionally joined.

Queen Elizabeth and Mrs. Roosevelt were also busy talking, with between-sentence waves from both for the throngs along the way. But the parol, one of the day's few unexpected developments, proved a disappointment to hundreds who had paid good cash for seats at upper windows from which to see the spectacle.

At the White House door, the party was met by John May, aged and veteran negro butler; by Howell Crim, Charles Claunch and Wilson Searles, White House "ushers." All were introduced and their majesties had a word for each.

Meet Diplomats.
An elevator awaited them inside. The King and Queen stepped off at the first floor to meet the Washington diplomatic corps in the historic east room, where Andrew Jackson once sat rubbing his stockings. The President and Mrs. Roosevelt proceeded to their apartment upstairs to rest and change. It was about that time that

FIRST LADY WRITES ABOUT ROYAL VISIT IN DAILY COLUMN

Next-best to being among the guests at the entertainment of King George and Queen Elizabeth at the White House and Hyde Park will be to read the first-hand account of the events by Eleanor Roosevelt in her column, "My Day," which appears on the woman's page of The Constitution.

From the time of their arrival yesterday in Washington until their departure from Hyde Park Sunday night for Canada and England, Mrs. Roosevelt will be hostess to the British sovereigns.

As such she will have unique opportunity to record the events of their stay. And while her account of the royal sojourn will be limited by diplomatic convention and official courtesy, the fact that such topics as she writes of are recorded by a principal eye-witness to the most historic social event in the history of this country, will carry immense interest.

Mrs. Roosevelt is reporting in her column not only news of the time the King and Queen are the country's guests, but also of preparations for the entertainment of the rulers from overseas, and of any facts of interest immediately subsequent to their leaving the United States.

Washington got its first sharp reminder that the weatherman had unco-operatively foreseen thunder-showers for the afternoon and perhaps slickers and raincoats for the gala garden party at the British embassy. A heavy rain fell downtown, but reports from the embassy, out on Massachusetts avenue, were that its carefully combed grass was still dust-dry.

After an intimate luncheon, attended by three Roosevelt sons—James, Elliott and Franklin Jr.—and their wives, the King and Queen turned sightseers, to the delight of Washington.

Cooler in a light business suit, the King changed his salute to a wave of the hand as the group set out for the Lincoln Memorial, Rock Creek park and the National Cathedral. The Queen had changed to a powder blue silk street dress. Mrs. Roosevelt still wore her blue wool.

The President acted as a "capital guide" for His Majesty.

After the garden party, a dazzling state dinner at the White House brought the day's program to a close, with the King and Queen staying the night at the White House.

At the state dinner, the President said that the United States and Great Britain have made their principal contribution to civilization by showing that international grievances can be settled peacefully. In illustration, he pointed to the settlement of a recent dispute over two uninhabited Pacific islands that each wanted to use for aviation purposes.

Urges Understanding.
"If this illustration of the use of methods of peace, divorced from aggression, could only be universally followed, relations between all countries would rest upon a sure foundation, and men and women everywhere could once more look upon a happy, a prosperous and a peaceful world."

"May this kind of understanding between our countries grow ever closer, and may our friendship prosper. Ladies and gentlemen, we drink to the health of his majesty, King George VI."

Responding, the King said: "From Canada, which we have just left and whither we shall soon return, I bring you today the warm greetings of a neighbor and a trusted friend. From my other dominions, from the United Kingdom, and from all my empire I carry to you expressions of the utmost cordiality and good will."

"As I drink a toast to you, Mr. President, I wish you every possible health and happiness. I trust and believe that in years to come the history of the United States will continue to be marked by that ordered progress and by that prosperity which have been theirs in the past. And I pray that our great nations may ever in the future walk together along the path of friendship in a world of peace."

Wine a Secret.
What wine the toasts were drunk in remained a dark secret. Mr. Roosevelt had repeatedly declined to divulge the brand chosen, other than to make it clear that American wine producers need have no fear it would be a foreign vintage.

The guests, some 60 of them, assembled before the dinner under the crystal chandeliers of the east room, lined up in accordance with their precedence as determined by the protocol division of the State Department. At the appointed hour, Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt and the King and Queen descended and stood at the center door, while the guests approached and were presented.

These ceremonies completed, the President, accompanied by an aide, escorted Queen Elizabeth to the state dining room, followed by the King and Mrs. Roosevelt.

Feast for a King.

The table was set with Irish linens, gold plated flatware, and a 14-foot gold plated centerpiece purchased in France by President Monroe. Great clusters of white orchids, tinged with lavender, added a fragile beauty to the table. Four golden fruit bowls were heaped with mammoth hot-house grapes, and tapers burned in four gold-plated candelabra.

The Roosevelt china was used. It is a fine Lenox ware, bearing the presidential seal in soft colors interwoven with the Roosevelt crest. This is ringed with a narrow band of cobalt blue set with gold stars and edged with gold. A feast fit to be set before a king was prepared in the White House kitchens. The menu: Clam cocktail, calf's head soup, terrapin and corn bread, boned capon with cranberry sauce, peas, buttered beets, sweet potato cones, frozen cheese and cress salad, maple and almond ice cream, white pound cake and coffee.

Dinner over, the next thing on the program was a gala musicale. While the guests were eating, a stage was erected at one end of the east room, and some 200 more guests arrived. The program was intended to give their Britannic Majesties an example, primarily, of native American music, negro spirituals, cowboy songs, mountain songs and dances and the like. The performers: Marion Anderson, negro contralto; the North Carolina Spiritual Singers; Alan Lomax; the Coon Creek Girls; the Soco Gap Square-Dance Team; Kate Smith, who sang her familiar "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain," and Lawrence Tibbett, baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

NEW LEGAL FIGHT OVER VOTE LOOMS

Dwight T. Minhinnett Says He Will Carry Battle to High Court.

A new legal skirmish over failure of Tuesday's state election to carry the names of candidates for the judgeship of the civil court of Fulton county was in prospect yesterday.

Dwight T. Minhinnett planned to file a contest with the Governor because about 30 written-in votes he claims he received in the Buckhead district were not counted by election managers.

Anticipating an adverse ruling by the Governor on his contest,

Minhinnett said he intends to carry the case to the supreme court. Another effort to force the names on the ballot, which was filed by Joe Hill Smith, already is pending in the court, and a hearing on Smith's mandamus action is scheduled for June 19.

Both Minhinnett and Smith qualified for the election, but Hughes Spalding, of the county legal staff, told Ordinary Thomas H. Jeffries only those names certified by the Governor should be placed on the local ballot.

POSTPONE BRIDGES HEARING.—WASHINGTON, June 8.—(P)—The Labor Department announced today that the opening of a deportation hearing at San Francisco for Harry Bridges, west coast CIO director, had been postponed from June 26 to July 10.

RIVERS PRESENTED OGLETHORPE GIFT

London Attorney Brings Picture of Famous Painting of General.

A copy of the portrait of James Edward Oglethorpe that hangs in the British Museum was presented to Governor Rivers yesterday by Eric Underwood, prominent London attorney.

Eighteen months ago, Underwood, his wife, son John and daughter Jacynthe were guests of United States District Judge and Mrs. E. Marvin Underwood. Governor Rivers was introduced, the talk turned to Oglethorpe, and the Englishman promised to send the Governor a photograph of the portrait.

The Underwoods of London arrived here last week for another visit with the Underwoods of Atlanta, and the picture was brought with them. It will hang in the Governor's private office, one of his secretaries said.

The London Underwoods and Atlanta Underwoods are no kin, but met several years ago when Judge and Mrs. E. Marvin Underwood were in England. Since then, the two families have maintained close contact. The Underwoods of London arrived in America six weeks ago, spent a month in New York, and the last two weeks in Atlanta. They will leave soon to inspect Kentucky bluegrass stock farms, and will drive west to Yellowstone park. They plan to return to England via Canada.

GEORGIANS ATTEND MAJESTIES' PARTY

But George Refuses F. D. R.'s Invitation to Musicals for King, Queen.

By GLADSTONE WILLIAMS. Staff Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, June 8.—After joining with the nation's notables in attending the garden party for King George VI and Queen Elizabeth at the British embassy this afternoon, Senator and Mrs. George declined an invitation to go to the White House as guests of President and Mrs. Roosevelt to-night at a musicale in honor of the royal couple.

While the invitation list to the musical was not made public, Senator and Mrs. George, so far as known, are the only Georgians who were included.

No explanation was made, but capital gossip recalled the President's attempted purge of the senator in last summer's primaries.

Ramspeck Attends. Senator and Mrs. George attended the embassy garden party, along with at least three other Georgians, Representative Carl Vinson, of Millersville, and Representative and Mrs. Robert Ramspeck, of Decatur. Mrs. Vinson was ill and unable to go.

Commenting on the party, Mrs. George said: "I had a grand time. The Queen was dressed lovely. Everybody around me oh'd and ah'd over her."

"It was quite thrilling," said Mrs. Ramspeck. "We were particularly impressed with the democratic bearing of the King and Queen."

The question of curtsying to the royal couple, which had troubled wives of the congressional contingent from the start, did not arise. The King and Queen merely walked through the lines of assembled guests without individual presentations necessitating curtsying, Mrs. George explained.

Russell Not Present. Senator Russell was the only other member of the state delegation to receive one of the much-coveted invitations to the garden party, but failed to put in an appearance.

Senator George, Vinson and Ramspeck at the garden party wore the conventional top hat, morning coat and striped trousers prescribed by diplomatic usage for such formal occasions. The wife of the senior senator was becomingly gowned in a toast-colored marquisette garden dress with May wine hat and ensemble. Mrs. Ramspeck, on the other hand, selected a fetching short chiffon gown of violet tone, with slippers of a similar shade to match. Her hat was of the leghorn garden variety.

KING, QUEEN MINGLE WITH U. S. LEADERS

WASHINGTON, June 8.—(P)—King George of England and his pretty Queen met and mingled with hundreds of America's official and social elite for an hour today.

Strolling separate through 1,400 guests in the British embassy garden, they shook hands with senators, international bankers, presidential possibilities and congressmen from the middle west.

King George had tea on the white-columned portico with several men in turn, including J. P. Morgan, international banker. The King, incidentally, took cream, one lump of sugar, and smoked a cigarette.

Queen Elizabeth, in a bouffant long white dress, pearls, and a white picture hat, had tea with several ladies, including Mrs. John Garner, wife and secretary of the vice president.

Hardly had the British King-Emperor and Elizabeth arrived, before they were down among the guests. He must have greeted 150; she nearly 100, on long and winding walks through the garden.

They captured many hearts when they first strolled out together under the tall white Queen Anne columns and a white-helmeted band from the British cruiser Exeter struck up "God Save the King."

LAW STRICT ON TREES.

Richmond's (Virginia) spacious tree-covered capitol lawn will have to wait until 1940 to get some new trees. Eight dead ones were removed with 50 carloads of dead wood, and cannot be replaced until the 1940 legislature makes an appropriation for them.

Women of today are not the heavy eaters their mothers were. Current figures prove that.

KING QUESTIONED ABOUT WAR DEBTS

Representative Sweeney
Sends Telegram to Monarch
at White House.

WASHINGTON, June 8.—(AP)—King George had no more than got to town today before a member of congress demanded that he say what Great Britain intends to do about its war debt to the United States.

Representative Sweeney, Democrat, Ohio, read in the house a telegram he said he had sent to the British monarch at the White House suggesting that as long as England is spending "a few billion dollars" annually for armaments, she might give "some consideration" to her debts to a country "whose World War assistance made possible continuance of your majesty's government."

The telegram added: "Because London dispatches have characterized your visit to the United States as an official one, I believe that I am acting within the boundaries of propriety in demanding that you publicly state what your government intends to do about payment of war debts due this nation."

Yesterday Sweeney joined Representative McGranery, Democrat, Pennsylvania, in protesting the detention in Detroit of Sean Russell, former leader of the outlawed Irish Republican army. Immigration authorities charged Russell had made false statements upon obtaining admittance to the United States five weeks ago. He was released on bond today.

McGranery and Sweeney predicted that "a considerable number" of congressmen indignant over the action against Russell would boycott tomorrow's congressional reception for King George and Queen Elizabeth.

MAN ADMITS $200 DAILY 'BUG' PROFIT

Suspect Is Arrested on Lottery Charges.

A man who admitted he made a $200-a-day profit on the "bug," but complained of "getting hit for more than $1,000 Wednesday," according to police, was arrested on lottery charges yesterday.

Patrolmen Burton Carroll and George Tumlin, of Fulton county police, said he identified himself as L. E. Vandover. He was arrested in an automobile on Marietta road, near Inman Yards, the officers reported.

Police said $29 cash and a quantity of "bug" tickets were found in his possession.

King's Appreciation Expressed to U. S.

WASHINGTON, June 8.—(AP)—King George asked the press today to thank on his behalf American citizens who have sent him messages.

George Steward, press liaison officer traveling with the King, issued the following statements:

"On the occasion of his official birthday and on his arrival in the United States, the King has received so many messages of congratulation from citizens of the United States and from all parts of the world that his majesty finds it impossible to reply to them individually.

"He would, however, like the senders to know how greatly he appreciated their good wishes and would be grateful for the courtesy of the press in making this known."

FOX FUR TRADED FOR FOX.
Irving Miller, 19-year-old son of a Cleveland furrier, is learning his father's business—and still has a little to learn. He traded a fox fur to a friend in return for a live, furry fox.

$8.40 IN TAXES COSTS $101.
One reason why taxes are high at Redding, Cal., appears to be that it costs too much to collect them. A report to the city council for one month showed that it had cost $101.26 to collect $8.40 in back assessments.

Texts of Roosevelt Toast and King's Response at State Dinner

WASHINGTON, June 8.—(AP)—Following are the texts of the toast offered by President Roosevelt at the state dinner tonight, and the response of King George VI:

Your Majesties: In the life of a nation, as in that of an individual, there are occasions that stand out in high relief. Such an occasion is the present one, when the entire United States is welcoming to its soil the King and Queen of Great Britain, of our neighbor Canada, and of all the far-flung British commonwealth of nations. It is an occasion for festivities, but it is also fitting that we give thanks for the bonds of friendship that link our two peoples.

Lacking in Fear.
I am persuaded that the greatest single contribution our two countries have been enabled to make to civilization, and to the welfare of peoples throughout the world, is the example we have jointly set by our manner of conducting relations between our two nations.

It is because each nation is lacking in fear of the other that we have unfortified borders between us. It is because neither of us fears aggression on the part of the other that we have entered no race of armaments, the one against the other.

The King and I are aware of a recent episode. Two small uninhabited islands in the center of the Pacific became of sudden interest to the British empire and to the United States as stepping stones for commercial airplanes between America and Australia. Both nations claimed sovereignty. Both nations had good cases. To have entered into a long drawn out argument could have meant ill-will between us and delay in the use of the islands by either nation. It was suggested that the problem be solved by the joint use of both islands by both nations, and, by a gentleman's agreement, to defer the question of ultimate sovereignty until the year 1989. The passage of 50 years will solve many problems.

Platform of Peace.
If this illustration of the use of methods of peace, divorced from aggression, could only be universally followed, relations between all countries would rest upon a sure foundation, and men and women everywhere could once more look upon a happy, a prosperous and a peaceful world.

May this kind of understanding between our countries grow ever closer, and may our friendship prosper. Ladies and gentlemen, we drink to the health of his majesty, King George VI.

The King's response:
The visit which the Queen and I are paying you today is something which has been in our minds for many weeks, and if we have had our moments of anxiety they have served to make us realize how intensely we have been looking forward to the present occasion. I wish therefore in the first place to thank you for your kind invitation and for your still kinder welcome. We have been deeply touched by the manner in which

Washington has already received us; and we expect to enjoy every minute of our remaining time in the United States.

Greetings of Friend.
From Canada which we have just left and whither we shall soon return, I bring you today the warm greetings of a neighbor and a trusted friend. From my other dominions, from the United Kingdom, and from all my empire I carry to you expressions of the utmost cordiality and good will. As I drink a toast to you, Mr. President, I wish you every possible health and happiness. I trust and believe that in years to come the history of the United States will continue to be marked by that ordered progress and by that prosperity which have been the in the past. And I pray that our great nations may ever in the future walk together along the path of friendship in a world of peace.

L. W. DOUGLAS HEADS
NEW YORK MUTUAL LIFE
NEW YORK, June 8.—(AP)—Lewis Williams Douglas, former director of the federal budget, today was elected president of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, to take office January 1. He will succeed David Franklin Houston, President Wilson's secretary of agriculture, who January 1 will become chairman of the board of trustees. Douglas resigned as vice chancellor of McGill University to accept the insurance company post.

'Carriers' Hinder Typhoid Fever War

Dr. Brown Cites Danger of Epidemic in Talk Before Public Health Association Gathering.

By LUKE GREENE.

Roaming through rural Georgia like ghosts in the night are carriers of typhoid fever which must be sought out and treated if the state is to continue its progressive work in controlling the disease.

This was brought out yesterday by Dr. A. Wilson Brown, assistant epidemiologist in the Georgia Department of Public Health, as he unfolded the results of his experiments with typhoid fever before the Georgia Public Health Association meeting.

These carriers referred to by Dr. Brown may not appear to have the disease. However, the germ lies imbedded in their systems and is transmitted to other persons.

Investigations Needed.

"Further reduction of typhoid fever should be effected through epidemiological investigations of sporadic cases or epidemics to discover carriers and prevent them from spreading the disease," Dr. Brown said.

He pointed out that typhoid fever in Georgia is a rural problem and the control measures should be directed to these areas. He added that the rural distribution of the disease presents a particular problem because of the mass movement of tenant farmers from one district to another.

In an earlier address, Ralph McGill, executive editor of The Constitution, told the doctors and health officials that one of the principal faults of the health department members, newspapers and laymen is that "we have not done a better job of selling to the people of Georgia what we are up against" in the health program.

Newspapers to Aid.

Urging a program of education through the newspapers for adult groups, McGill stressed the use of "human interest" stories in newspapers in putting over Georgia's public health programs.

He offered the suggestion that adult groups get together in rural communities and learn what is going on in the health program.

In discussing malaria, Dr. Mark F. Boyd, of the Rockefeller Foundation, Tallahassee, Fla., said this disease could be eliminated entirely "if people would live in mosquito-proof houses."

The convention heard an appeal from Dr. William H. Myers, of Savannah, president of the Medical Association of Georgia, that the association "acquaint members of the general assembly with our problems."

Politics Favored.

He asserted public health did not receive co-operation from the last legislature because "it was evident that many members favored more popular political issues, and voted for a reduction in the appropriation for the health program."

Dr. T. F. Abercrombie, director of the State Department of Public Health, outlined a plan for dividing the state into six districts to provide better service to counties not maintaining regular health units. Beginning July 1, each district will be provided with a medical officer, two sanitary engineers and a nurse.

Sessions of the convention will be resumed at 9 o'clock this morning in the Biltmore hotel and will continue through tomorrow.

Sally Saver To Address Dealers At State Retail Food Meeting

Constitution Columnist On Program as Group Convened on Sunday.

Sally Saver, food editor of The Constitution, whose daily columns on the purchase, preparation and serving of food have become an indispensable guide to thousands of housewives in Atlanta and throughout the south, will be one of the principal speakers appearing on the program of the 19th annual convention of the Georgia Retail Food Dealers' Association, which opens in a three-day session Sunday at the Biltmore hotel.

Miss Saver, whose food column has been an institution on The Constitution for many years, is scheduled to address the group at the morning session Tuesday.

She will deal specifically with food in its relation to the housewife, outlining the policy of her daily column and its purpose in helping housewives with their problems in the purchase and preparation of food.

Value to Dealers. Her talk is expected to be of considerable value to the food dealers as it will give them, from the woman's viewpoint, an insight into one of the chief factors of their business.

More than 1,500 retailers, 600 of whom are expected from out of town, will arrive here Sunday for the opening event on the convention program, a barbecue at Lakemore between 4 p. m. and 7 p. m., at which the Atlanta meat packers and bakers will be hosts.

Business sessions will convene at 10 o'clock Monday morning at the Biltmore hotel with John W. McDonald Jr., of Augusta, president of the state association, presiding.

Welcome Addresses. The meeting will open with invocation by Rabbi Harry H. Epstein, after which the delegates will be welcomed in short addresses by Governor Rivers, Mayor Hartfield and J. H. Merritt and M. Blank, both of Atlanta.

The response will be made by Lester W. Grady, of Macon, who also will introduce state officers.

Other events scheduled for the morning session include addresses by Mrs. Stephen May of New York, who will talk on "The Individual Retail Grocer," and W. H. H. Jones, of Augusta, a member of the Georgia house of representatives, and the appointment of committees, the convention adjourning at 1 o'clock for luncheon, at which the National Biscuit Company will be host.

The afternoon will be given

over to entertainment of the delegates and visitors, during which they will be taken on a sight-seeing tour of the city, the meeting convening again at 8 o'clock for the annual banquet and dance. Robert M. Gamble, of Macon, will preside at the banquet.

Closing Session.

The closing business session will be convened at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning with Emory L. Brooks, president of the Atlanta association, in the chair. A feature of the session will be an address by State President McDonald, to be followed by the address by Miss Saver and a round-table discussion when the food dealers will discuss present-day problems confronting the retail grocer.

Reports of committees will be considered and officers for the new year elected, after which the convention will adjourn for luncheon to officially close the meeting.

WAYCROSS FIRM FACES NEW WAGE-HOUR CASE

AUGUSTA, Ga., June 8.—(P)—Federal Judge William H. Barrett today ordered Rubin Brothers Footwear, Inc., of Waycross, and Isadore Rubin, of New York, production manager, to show cause July 10 why a parole assessed for violation of the wage-hour law should not be revoked.

At the same time, additional information was filed, charging violation of the law since the first cases were heard May 10.

BUHL OPTICAL FIRM TO OPEN NEW STORE

Latest Advances in Industry Offered Patrons.

Buhl Optical Company, one of the world's largest makers of eyeglasses, will open its new store in Atlanta tomorrow at 4 Peachtree street, N. E.

The new store embodies every new style achievement in the optical industry. In the window is an optical exhibition taken from the Buhl laboratories showing, step by step, the various methods used to acquire accuracy in each pair of glasses.

The Buhl organization was founded 28 years ago in Pittsburgh. From modest sources its laboratories have expanded until today more than 400 skilled craftsmen are employed. Each pair of glasses is ground to a precise, accurate prescription.

COUNTY EMPLOYEES ENTERTAIN TONIGHT

Courthouse Group Will Hold First Annual Ball and Floor Show.

Members of Fulton County Employees' Union, Chapter 2, Local No. 3, composed of courthouse employees, and their friends will hold the first annual ball and floor show beginning at 9 o'clock tonight at the Shrine Mosque, it was announced yesterday by Joe Bush, chairman of the committee of arrangements.

More than 1,000 persons are expected to attend, including leading political figures of the state and local governments. Members of other unions in the Atlanta trade area also have been invited.

The Mack Wooten orchestra, the team of Gene and Eugene Adams, Francis Miller, Foy Harris, Gene Chastain, Louise Kibler and Joe Reed will provide entertainment. Kenneth Murrell is president of the organization.

Other officers are: Miss Elizabeth Pool, vice president; Mrs. Zac Adamson, recording secretary, and Ivan G. Cochran, financial secretary and treasurer.

Straw in the Wind

It has been predicted by many observers that the ultimate fate of the Nazi regime in Germany would be destruction through revolt of the Germans themselves. These predictions have been based upon various arguments, including faith that the inherent decency of most Germans would eventually revolt against the brutalities of the Hitler policies, against the vicious persecution of the Jews and the paganistic campaigns against the church. It is also contended that not forever will the people of any nation remain quiescent under the iron discipline imposed, by the Nazi government, on the German people as a whole, particularly upon workers in the factories, on the farms and on the public works.

That this development is beginning is indicated in a recent news story from Germany. Published in News Review, of London, the story tells how the workers for the Rheinmetall Company were kept in the shops to hear an address by Bangert, German labor leader. The speech was broadcast throughout the plant by loudspeakers, as Bangert spoke in the main office. The address proved to be a tirade against alleged laziness by the workers, with the assertion that future unjustified absences from work would be punished as sabotage.

The workers then began shouting in response, yelling, "We want shorter hours, higher wages and more liberty." Finally one unidentified voice cried, above the rest, "Down with Hitler!" There was a moment's silence before the men took up that cry together, yelling it until the loud speakers were drowned out. The workers then left the plant in a body, still crying "Nieder mit Hitler!"

Following this incident, it is stated, notices were posted all over the plant warning that any worker found guilty of mentioning or discussing happenings within the shops, on the outside, would be punished with death.

Whether or not the story in all its detail is exactly true, undoubtedly there is some basis for it. Whatever actually occurred in the Rheinmetall Company plant is a straw in the wind that gives initial indication of the source and direction of the coming storm.

Unless there is a drastic slackening of the reins with which Hitler and his Nazis have attempted to control and to drive an entire nation into slavery, a storm is bound to come that will sweep all before it and only die out after a bath of blood and horror such as Germany has never before known.

For the pendulum that swings too far in one direction will swing just as far, or farther, in the other.

The World Improves

International and economic horizons may be clouded today, but in the things of lesser portent, those comparatively minor, yet important, factors of daily life, it is only necessary to compare the present with the ever so recent past to see that society and its shibboleths are far more intelligent today than they have been.

For instance, take that interesting item of the swimming suit. To quote from the slogan of a well-known advertiser, the bathing suit of yesterday has become the swimming suit of today.

The swimming pools and beaches are proving a blessing to the cause of physical morality by destroying that evil prudery of Victorianism which saw something immodest in exposure of any portion of the human anatomy to public view. Which is a result highly to be desired. If the one-piece swimming suit of today, with its frank exposure of the human form, divine or otherwise, feminine or masculine, can remove false modesty from the mind of man or woman, and substitute unhampered joy in the freedom of bodily movement, it will deserve to rank with the cotton gin and the printing press as liberators of the human soul.

That this freedom is but of recent winning is proven by a glance into the back files of the newspapers—and not so far back.

Only 25 years ago, on the morning of June 13, 1914, The Constitution published, on its front page, the fact that a 15-year-old boy had been refused admittance to the Piedmont park pool because the sleeves of his bathing suit did not reach below the elbows! And, on the same day, an 11-year-old girl was similarly barred from the pool because of an inch or so of exposed bare knee between the hem of her skirt and the tops of her stockings! Yet, even then it was noted, that all girls of that age wore ankle socks, with knees bare from sock-top to knee, on the streets, at school and at home. Times have truly changed—for the better—in the matter of anatomical frankness.

Trouble in Japan

News developments of the Japanese adventure into China have, of recent months, perforce been crowded from the front pages of the newspapers by happenings of greater interest, and greater import to America, in other parts of the world.

There is, therefore, unusual interest in a well-authenticated report from Tokyo which indicates the real test of the morale of the Japanese people is rapidly approaching. This spring, it is stated, the great mass of the Japanese people, the man on the street and the woman in the home, have felt, stringently, the economic burden of the costly war in China. With approximately 50 per cent of the nation's productive power commandeered, this year, for military purposes, the civilian population is severely pinched for many of the necessities of life.

Prices to the consumer have advanced some 25 per cent, textiles, metal goods and other manufactured products, are woefully scarce, forcing many Japanese to go without. Only in food is there any hope of a sufficient supply to "go round."

Add to this the growing weakness of the yen in international exchange, together with the remarkable retention of par value by the Chinese dollar, and the economic picture of Japan is seen in most sombre shades.

Facing this situation, it is expected there will be an early political showdown, in Japan, on the question whether to make another gigantic, costly effort for quick victory in China, or whether to get out of that country while Japan is able to retire.

The latter outcome seems extremely unlikely, in view of the Oriental insistence of "saving face." Yet when, as reported, the people of Japan are beginning to talk openly of their troubles in the hearing of foreigners, ancient Japanese customs may not hold sufficient power to halt an action which will soon, if it does not already do so, involve the very survival of the present structure of Japanese economy.

Saving the Foundation

When the final history of the depression years is written, one of the brightest spots will be the story of the saving of homes and the building of homes. Relief may have saved the superstructure of national stability. The saving of homes through the Home Owners' Loan Corporation saved the foundation. The more stable financing of homes through the principles of the Federal Housing Administration strengthened that foundation.

The work of the HOLC is well illustrated in the report of its activities in Georgia, reflecting a payment of 21 per cent of the principal of the loans to home owners and the fact that more than 14,000 Georgia families were enabled to save their homes at a time when their status was practically hopeless. It is a tribute to the determination of these people that they have been slowly scattering the wreckage of depression years and salvaging homes from despair.

It has been axiomatic that the greatest national stability can be attained only when the vast majority of the citizens are owners of land and of homes. The tragic consequences of the reverse can be clearly demonstrated in the agricultural economy of the nation, notably in the south. Tenancy is an avoided responsibility, either on the part of the individual citizen or on the part of the nation. That 14,000 Georgia homes have been kept in the hands of their purchasers at a time of crisis without undue cost to the people of the country is a tribute to the work of the agency and to the families thus enabled to maintain their status without loss of an investment for which they long had labored.

They say the possibility of a Soviet thrust still figures in Tokyo's strategy in China. Her gunners may yet have to master the three-cushion shot.

Things could be worse, and the Philadelphia who worried because an insurance company doctor turned his application down will now relax.

A London novelist has a pen in hand for hours, he says, without being able to put a word on paper. We have known this plight, in postoffices.

The country finds itself for the moment with no public enemy No. 1. But one or another of the parole boards may have a new sensation up its sleeve.

Editorial of the Day

COUNTY UNIT PLAN

(From The Journal of Labor.)

One would be presumptuous to claim that all of the ills that trouble our state are due to a single factor. Yet among the more important ones and one that is well up at the top of the list of the things that handicap us is the so-called county unit plan of the election of state officials. Its evils have been pointed out for years. It has been condemned by practically all impartial students of good government. The fact that it is the only state in the Union that elects its officials in this fashion ought of itself to brand it as obsolete. To say that it is undemocratic and contrary to all of the principles of modern democracy is to put the matter mildly. It is iniquitous, oppressive and conducive to all manner of evil practices.

Under this plan candidates are forced to center their campaign in those areas that are sparsely settled but which after all determine the election. In other words, in Georgia it is geography that elects officials and not the people themselves. In more than one instance it has been the actual experience that a few hundred votes properly placed would change the whole complexion of our state government. If it is the purpose of government to govern according to the wishes of the people, Georgia must certainly find some plan whereby the people may express their voice effectively. We speak much of equality, but in this state there is no such thing as equality. A man's vote in Fulton county or some of the other larger counties of the state is practically negligible.

We indorse most heartily, therefore, the action of the Georgia Federation of Labor in resolving that "We, the delegates to the 41st annual convention of the Georgia Federation of Labor, do condemn the county unit system and call on delegates from all sections of the state to acquaint themselves with the law governing this system to arouse the workers and friends to seek to strike from our statute books this vicious county unit system."

It is about time to stop this rule by geography and establish a government by the people.

THE CAPITAL PARADE FAIR ENOUGH

By JOSEPH ALSOP AND ROBERT KINTNER.

ILLUMINATIVE FAD WASHINGTON, June 8.—Back in the business appeasement era, Undersecretary of the Treasury John W. Hanes decorated his office with signs inquiring, "Does It Contribute to Recovery?" The signs, expressing the Hanes viewpoint on public policy, irritated the President and his New Dealers to a near-frenzy. Now, however, the New Dealers are circulating signs of their own, bearing the following legend: "My right has been rolled up. My left has been driven back. My center has been smashed. I have ordered an advance in all directions. General Foch."

Small slips of paper typed with this famous quotation by industrial henchmen are to be seen in the offices of most of the top New Dealers. They are being carried round and shown, with glee, as the best expression of the President's current policy. They are, in fact, one of those little, but illuminating, fads which come and go in schools, in offices, and even in all-powerful national administrations. As such, they may be taken to sum up the New Dealer's intentions for the immediate future.

MAN WHO DISOBEYED Unfortunately, as they are, the New Dealers' signs are in their first effort to advance the Mead bill to aid small business, the New Dealers have met with a prompt reverse. To their surprise and chagrin, their old spending ally, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Marriner S. Eccles, appeared before the senate banking and currency committee to curse the Mead bill from hell to breakfast. According to Eccles, the Mead bill won't work, is bad banking, and confides the task of aiding small business to the wrong agency. The bill names the RFC to carry out the program. Eccles offered a substitute program to be carried out by the federal reserve system.

The Eccles foray is regarded as flagrant disobedience of the orders for a general advance. It is considered all the more unjustified because the Mead bill program was presented to Eccles for general criticism, more than a month before the bill was pressed in the senate. Altogether, in fact, Eccles has aroused the New Dealer group to a high pitch of fury, which is only increased by the memory of his recent opposition to another New Dealer measure, the Barkley trust indenture bill, and by his refusal to defend the New Deal spending policy (although he heartily believes in it) on the radio.

Besides Eccles' independence, there is a tremendous commotion at the Treasury to worry the Mead bill's sponsors. Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau Jr. is conscientious but nervous, as usual. He has initiated a full dress study of the bill by no less than 15 members of his staff, and the committee has been meeting almost hourly. Some opposition has already developed, particularly coming from the comptroller of the currency, Preston Delano; his deputy, Cyril Upham, and the former budget director, Daniel W. Bell. Some committee members see socialized banking in the Mead bill, while others decry too great profits for the banks.

NOT QUITE "ALL" DIRECTIONS No doubt, when all is said and done, the Eccles opposition will be overcome. Morgenthau, if asked by the President, will fall in line. And Chairman Jesse H. Jones, of the RFC, thought to approve by Mead bill sponsors but now understood to be noncommittal, will accept his new powers with proper gratitude.

The only difficulty is that all these results require the intervention of the President. That, really, is why the New Dealer never can advance "in all directions," however anxious New Dealers may be to do so.

Think of the Mead bill, a major item of legislation only because so much is hoped for it, which calls on the President to pacify three conflicting agencies and bring them into line. And then remember that the Mead bill is only one step in one direction in the general advance, which is intended to be both political and economic. Then you can see why the general advance is impossible.

For "Happy Days Are Here Again,"
Used to be our song,
But "Heaven Can Wait" is now our
I wonder what went wrong?

A Singer

Of Songs.

Many years ago there was a musical comedy team known as Williams and Walker. Colored men, they were. They won considerable fame in vaudeville and on Broadway. Walker died and Williams lived to achieve even greater heights as a solo performer. He was called Bert Williams. You remember him, don't you? Bert Williams singing, "I Ain't Got Nobody."

They carried a show, a sort of mixture of musical comedy and the modern revue production, to England when I was living there, a lad in my teens. They played the Royal Command, before King Edward VII. I saw the show in Liverpool and enjoyed it immensely. The cast was billed as "All Negro," and it puzzled me to notice the different shades of color, from those who appeared fully white behind the footlights, to the shining black face of Bert Williams himself. The same phenomenon had created the same wonder when I heard the Fisk Jubilee Singers in Liverpool's Philharmonic Hall.

I had always, until then, thought of all negroes as coal black. As black as the end men in the various productions of "Christy Minster" I'd attended. (By the way, if you're seeking the height of minstrelsy, see an All-British version of a minstrel, blackface, next time you're in England. The broad British accents coming from those blackened faces is screamingly ridiculous to anyone who knows American negro dialect.)

Then In Kingston.

Years later, in Kingston, Ontario, I was more or less interested in a new form of amusement. Moving pictures. In those days a picture show consisted of an ordinary store with the fixtures removed, rows of undertaker chairs for the patrons, a screen at one end and a primitive projection machine over the box office at the entrance. Only staff required was a ticket seller, a combination ticket-taker, doorman and usher, an operator, a porter to sweep the place out and a piano player to render Hearts and Flowers at the emotional moments, to work the cocoanut shells when the cowboys galloped by and to rattle the drum during storm scenes and as the villain snuck up on the unsuspecting heroine.

And, inevitably, a singer to stand at one side of the screen while the "illustrated song slides" were shown through the stereopticon lens.

Which brings me to the next development of the plot for today. Kingston is a Lake Ontario port town. And it has its river front, with cheap lunchstands, tough saloons and usual honkytonk establishments to separate the sailor, newly ashore, from his pay.

One day there arrived in Kingston a giant negro. Black as black could be. He made, I think, the fourth of his race in the city. There was an aged negro couple, comfortably fixed financially, who lived somewhere in the city, and a young negro bootblack who was a town character and favorite.

The big negro newcomer got a job as a waiter in one of the waterfront dives. And he proved to be one of those singing waiters, who baritone the lacrimose songs of the day while he carried the trays amid the tables. He had a really good voice.

So it wasn't long before he was singing in one of the movie nickelodeons, on the main street of the place. At the then princely salary of $20 a week. Such singers usually got $12 or $15.

Thrifty

Soul.

The negro singer lived for next nothing and saved his money. In less than a year he bought an other nickelodeon, put in the first vaudeville with his pictures, for Kingston, hiked the price to 10 cents and was rapidly growing wealthy.

Next he bought a small passenger vessel, running on the river between Kingston and Gananoque. That prospered, too. He studied navigation and got his captain's and pilot's certificates. Bought another and larger boat for cross-lake service and made still greater profits.

Then he bought a magnificent 200-acre farm, over on Long Island, just across the harbor from Kingston. Built a really palatial home there and turned it into a routine sort of farm into the estate of a wealthy farming dilettante. Settled down and, as far as I know, may be there still.

The link I'm working toward is that this negro who became rich in a year or two at Kingston, had been a member of the Williams and Walker company I'd seen in Liverpool years before.

And he'd reached Kingston penniless, riding the rods of a freight train, dirty, ragged and hungry. The point is that sometimes success awaits us just around the corner when some backward step of life when the coveted opportunities of the big cities and the crowded ways brought to us nothing but failure and poverty and despair.

ONE WORD MORE

By RALPH MCGILL.

A THINNER KING AND QUEEN After seeing the pictures yesterday, showing the English King and Queen on parade in Washington, I halted the oscillation of the electric fan and turned it full upon my fevered brow. I felt hot.

Washington is hotter than Augusta, Ga., or Mobile, Ala. The Washington heat is a moist, clinging heat. One feels as if one were in a steam box with the control gadget turned to "Full Strength." It is a heat which sends small rivulets of perspiration down the arms and legs. It leaves one limp even when clad in the thinnest of linen or cotton suitings.

The pictures showed the English King to be clad in heavy regiments with a light woolen uniform. About it were belts and decorations. On his head was the traditional heavy hat of the officers' dress in the British navy. The heavy, stiff collar of the jacket was high about his neck.

The Queen looked warm enough and carried the traditional British umbrella. This one, doubtless, is related to the one which Mr. Chamberlain has made famous. One shuddered to read her dress was wool, fur-trimmed. Mrs. Roosevelt was minus an umbrella. She took it, depending on a wide hat to keep out the sun.

Mr. Roosevelt was clad in the customary morning clothes, including top hat. He could not have been very comfortable but he must have been suffering from chills as he thought of the King next him in the car.

I am sure England has today, a thinner King and Queen. The English just don't know what are cool clothes. They wear wool, winter and summer.

ONE CAN IMAGINE One can imagine them, at long last, in the privacy of their suite at the White House. The last butler and maid have gone.

The King shucks off his heavy dress coat and throws it on the bed.

"My word, Bess, wasn't the heat awful? Nice people. I liked this man Roosevelt. His smile is good. His voice has something in it that one likes. But wasn't it hot?"

The Queen must have been slipping off her shoes, wiggling the toes, and putting on comfortable slippers before the bath.

How curious they must have been, visiting the White House and recalling, perhaps, that had an English King of more than a century ago been a bit more careful about taxes, there might have been a White House and no United States of America, but one great Dominion of Canada stretching to the Mississippi and perhaps beyond.

Or would those minds, captured by the expanse of this new country; fired by the width and depth of it, have gone on to make themselves free and independent of a government beyond the seas? Well, Bess, let's see if we can look at the rooms where that fellow Jefferson lived and where that one they called "Old Hickory," what was his name, Jackson, wasn't it?—let's go see where they lived."

PRECAUTIONS, OF COURSE Germany commented on all the precautions, saying they were unusual in a free country.

Well, I was in Vienna, Austria, one day when Adolf Hitler arrived. And I saw the soldiers, triple deep on each side of the street. They had their arms locked. And behind the crowd, and in it, were plainclothes men. I knew because twice I was jerked out of the crowd for trying to make pictures. When he went to see his old pal, Il Doo-chay, he rode in a bullet-proof train. And this, mind you, in the country where they are supposed to worship Adolf.

Before the appearance the secret police went from house to house along the route and took down all names and said, at each house, "You are responsible if anything happens." They know what they are doing and it is but another illustration of their supreme gall that they can find something wrong about protection of the English King and Queen.

There ought to be protection. Too often there are poor, deluded persons whose brains have been cooked in hates and fears and insanity until they are willing to commit murder. There was the insane man who fired at Roosevelt in Florida. There are the cranks who send threatening letters. All of them are dangerous. There is just no telling when they will, as the boys say, blow a topper and come out to do damage. They've got to be watched.

There are enough crackpots in the German Bund to have stirred up some poor lunatic to a point where he might be willing to do something desperate to involve this country in trouble by firing at the King and Queen. Protection was wise and necessary. We couldn't take a chance.

More and more the King and Queen of England, symbols though they be, strike American people as being two natural people doing a very difficult job. It is fantastic that some should have objected to their coming.

A Crippled Boy Became the Champion Miler, But He Might Have Been Better If Uncrippled

By ROBERT QUILLEN.

The Browns are average young parents, and their little Billy, three years old, is spoiled—"rotten spoiled," the neighbors say.

Not for all the wealth of the world would the Browns cripple or deform their little boy's body, yet they are warring and deforming his mind and his character.

There was no excuse for it. Billy was so good-natured and sweet and friendly and smart that he scarcely needed any training. Given half a chance, he would have developed no faults at all.

But the Browns always did the wrong thing, as though deliberately trying to ruin him. They did wrong because their motive was wrong. Instead of trying to do what was best for Billy, they did what was easiest for themselves.

They don't fully realize what they are doing to Billy, for it is natural to avoid thinking about our failures while we can, and Billy isn't bad all the time. Unless he is crossed in some matter, he is happy and gay and affectionate, and then the Browns decide he isn't spoiled at all. They forget that a bandit may be jolly and friendly and good to his old parents, and thus seem a decent sort of chap when he isn't stealing.

They never have taught Billy to respect them or respect authority. He never obeys unless they tell him to do something he wishes to do. Being stronger than he is, they can force him to do some things; by various forms of bribery they can persuade him to do others; and by pretending they want him to do one thing, they can sometimes trick him into doing the opposite. But even the most self-deluded parent wouldn't call that obedience.

The trouble is that all the faults of training and lack of training have shown Billy, beyond any doubt, that he is cock of the walk. He is a smart kid, and naturally takes advantage of his opportunities. When the Browns so obviously strive to humor and please him, and so fearfully try to avoid antagonizing him, he would be dull indeed if he failed to realize that he is boss. And so much power and responsibility are too much for a little boy's mind. Even grown-ups become spoiled and overbearing and hateful under such circumstances.

Does it follow that Billy will become a wild youth and end in jail? Sometimes, but not often. You see, being the lord high sheriff is what spoils him, and when he starts to school and gets among older and tougher boys, he will find himself a private in the ranks.

When you watch badly spoiled, undisciplined kids, you sometimes despair of their future. But all around you are fine young fellows, clean and steady and dependable, who were "rotten spoiled" and hateful when they were kids. In the right environment they seem to snap out of it.

But you never know what they might have been if they had been free of that early handicap.

DIPLOMAS AWARDED AT SACRED HEART

Commencement Is First Held in Newly Decorated Church.

In the presence of six members of the Roman Catholic clergy, the 27 members of the graduation class of the Sacred Heart High school received their diplomas yesterday in the first commencement program held in the newly decorated Sacred Heart church on Ivy street.

The Very Rev. James T. Reilly, S. M., pastor of the church, gave the graduation address, urging the seniors to carry with them into life and to put into practice the same ideals and knowledge which they received during their school days. He also stressed the advantages received by the seniors in the combination educational and religious course they had received.

Little Mary Butler and Jeanette Sturtz led the procession of seniors into the church. The musical program was given by the Sacred Heart adult choir under the direction of Vincent Harley.

Members of the clergy attending the ceremonies were Rev. Joseph Smith and the Rev. Daniel Bourke, of the Immaculate Conception church, and the following from Sacred Heart: Fathers William Maguire, S. M.; Harry Hayes, S. M.; William Collins, S. M., and William Healey, S. M.

HOME FINANCING OF FHA AVAILABLE

Matheson Explains Amended National Housing Act.

Prospective home buyers, builders, contractors, and financiers were told yesterday by R. E. Matheson, state director of the Federal Housing Administration, that under the amended national housing act signed recently by the President, liberal home financing provisions are still at their disposal.

Among the principal features of the amended act, according to Matheson, is the extension of the amount of outstanding mortgage insurance obligations of the FHA from three to four billion dollars and continuation of the FHA's authority to insure mortgages on existing construction until July 1, 1941. Homes financed with FHA-insured mortgages will continue to be eligible for FHA financing indefinitely, he said.

THIS MORNING

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES II.

"Sic semper tyrannis!"

In affection for Franklin Delano Roosevelt and appreciation of epochal things accomplished for his country, many are coming to fear that a third term for him would unloose a dangerous "Sic semper tyrannis" spirit among those who oppose him. Violation of the anti-third term tradition would prey upon their minds until it became a negation for them of America's whole meaning and institution, an excuse for extralegal moves, a call for minute men, secret society, oaths, and even undertakings by armed force. Sober citizens of the right who join the rest of us now in laughing at the lunatic fringe of Fascists in this country would be tempted to a less laughable Fascism of their own. They might swear that America was no longer a democracy, that federal money and jobs used to establish a Fascist regime, and, probably in the name of anti-Fascism, they might seek a genuine Fascism of their own.

This is said without prejudice to the right or wrong of a third term, or to the necessity or lack of necessity for it, or to the good or bad of the New Deal. It is simply a wonder-out-loud on America's ability to stand the strain of discrediting hates, fears and suspicions that would accompany a ninth, tenth, eleventh and twelfth year of Roosevelt. We, for one, do not fear for what Roosevelt would do to the country if re-elected, but we are beginning to fear what the Roosevelt-haters will do to it if he continues to be their president.

This is something for Mr. Roosevelt, as a patriot, to consider well, it seems to us. No matter how much he would like to be vindicated again at the polls, no matter how impossible he finds it to discover another Democrat to take his place, no matter how much he may feel that his New Deal needs guarding and extending, he should consider in all earnest whether the country can stand the strain.

Mr. Farley's Post Office Department announces that, in connection with the visit of King George and Queen Elizabeth, facilities have been provided at Washington for applying the postmark "Royal Train R. P. O., U. S. A., June 9, 1939" to philatelic mail. No special cachet will be used, it is announced, and covers actually will not be transported on the royal train. This is marvelous. If stamp collectors will just stay naive enough, it opens a new world to them. Since stamps postmarked "Royal Train" don't have to ride the royal train, Mr. Farley can soon provide stamps postmarked "Planet Mars," or "The other Side of the Moon," or "Green Pastures," or "Noah's Ark."

As important as it may be to have no more new dealing now, it is just as important that the country not be given back to those who made new dealing necessary. In determination that it should not be, Republicans are joining Democrats these days, leaving no haven at all for some of our southern reactionaries. Listen to Republican Bruce Barton, who is prominently mentioned for the presidency: We must make sure that this bigger national income (to be obtained by reversing certain New Deal policies) is better distributed than in 1929. We cannot afford another bust. I believe that business has learned the lesson of the past 10 years. There is a much keener sense of social responsibility; a realization that success will be measured in the future not by money-making alone, but by contribution to human life. This more active social consciousness is one result of the New Deal; history may term it the one most important result.

MY LOVE IS WAITING

Friends Take Bart Off at Cannes.
Dorian Goes Ashore With Miles

By Margaret Gorman Nichols

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE:

When Dorian Lane inherited a thousand dollars, her mother, resentful because the best society in Parkton, Virginia, does not take her up, urged her to make a Mediterranean cruise and so meet the right people. Many friends see her off, including Tom Saunders, whose love she cannot return. Dorian, employed in the local bank, does not share her mother's ideas. As she boards the liner two young men are attracted by her beauty. One is Miles Kennedy, just out of college, whose father insists he make a European tour before he takes over the family business of the Boston shoe factory. The other, Bart Warren, who is handsome and kind, is loved by a succession of girls and then forgetting them. Dorian shares a cabin with pretty blond Patricia West, of New York who has been saving for five years from her saleswoman's salary for this cruise with the avowed intention of meeting and marrying a rich man. She is amazed when she meets the handsome six-year-old son, Stephen. She doesn't tell Bart that Marshall and Miles like each other. She is strangely attracted to Bart, but she has an undefined fear when he kisses her. Lynn Bart, who ran away from her husband in New York to meet a man in Cannes, tries to leap overboard, but Dorian holds her until Miles comes. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

INSTALLMENT VIII.

Again the evening passed too quickly. Again the faces were blurred, all the faces except Miles'. Strange how distinct it was while she danced with Bart. She saw Miles dance with Pat and later with Lynn and still later with a small dark-haired girl.

And it was after midnight again when she paused at her cabin, unlocked the door and turned to Bart. In a moment he would kiss her. It was absurd to speculate. She knew he would. All through the evening she had found herself anticipating this moment when he would kiss her again.

She went into his arms without hesitancy and her lips were warm and responsive and her arms were tight around him. He said with a chuckle, "Darling, go quickly or I won't let you go."

There were tears in her eyes when she closed the door and leaned against it. No use to search herself for answers. No use to ask herself questions and be tormented by doubts and uncertainties about herself and her feelings. She said softly, "I'm in love with him. I love Bart. I can't run away from it or put off admitting it."

Bart did not react to the stoop for quite some time outside her cabin. But he did realize with a shock that he had not wanted her to go and it also occurred to him with greater shock that before the cruise was over he would ask her to marry him.

On a ship there are no specific days of the week. For one day dissolves pleasantly into another and all sense of time is lost.

There were no faces strange to Dorian now. She met scores of people and talked with them. Usually during the day she could be found with a group that included Bart and Miles, Lynn, Fern and Young Stephen and Pat and Robert. With the increasing warmth of the sun they were usually to be found on the sports deck wearing colorful sports clothes and dark glasses.

But the nights were different. With the coming of darkness Dorian was with Bart and Fern retired to her cabin. Miles could be seen in various groups, dancing with various girls. Pat was alone with Robert. Lynn's recklessness and defiance increased at night. Those who did not know her story—and only Dorian and Miles knew it—thought her the gayest girl on the Napoli.

They were on the sports deck in the lazy hour of the afternoon just before tea time. Dorian glanced at Bart's profile, wishing she had the courage before all the others to take his hand that was close to hers. Did he love her? How many times had she asked herself that?

And Bart was wondering what had exploded in his mind several nights ago when it had occurred to him that he would ask Dorian to marry him. The following morning he had tried to dismiss it as a passing impulse but as the days went on he realized that she was the only girl he had ever wanted to marry—except Fern.

His taking the cruise was proof to him now that for a long time he had been bored, that his casual love affairs, his brief pursuit of pretty faces and the inevitably unhappy ending had wearied and disgusted him. And though for years he had scoffed at marriage and cleverly avoided it, he knew in his heart that that was what he had always wanted since he had wanted to marry Fern. And Dorian with her alert dark eyes and silky windswept hair was second choice.

The astute businessman in Bart told him that she would be a far better investment than a spoiled debutante who might remind him of his humble beginning or an actress who could and would not forget past triumphs. Dorian with an humble beginning, too, and grace and poise and beauty. And so each day what he had tried to dismiss as a passing impulse gained in strength.

Turning his head he looked at Fern who looked pensive, too. That would never die, never be less, desire for her, love for her. Always she would be the senior partner in his heart.

Lynn sighed. "Well, tomorrow we'll be in Gibraltar." And beyond Gibraltar was Cannes, where Jay would meet her. "Think of your new life, gay and full and interesting. Close your mind forever to the old, dull and dreary and lonely. She thought, "George probably hasn't missed a day at the office. He didn't miss a day when his father died." She smiled a bit—her smile, thinking, "I'm glad I did it! I'm glad!"

Stephen said plaintively, "Mother, let's go swimming."

"After tea time, darling."

"But you won't let me have any tea."

Miles said, "Steve, I'll take you swimming. I'm not much of a tea drinker. Anybody else want to go?"

Lynn and Pat said that they did and the little group disbanded.

To Fern, Dorian said, "Stephen is crazy about Miles."

Fern laughed. "Because, I suspect, he calls him 'Steve,' which sounds delightfully tough and masculine." And because she did not want to be alone with Dorian and Bart, she said, "I think I'll go, too."

When she had gone Dorian said, "She's lovely, isn't she? I suspect she's very rich but she's very modest about it. But she gives herself away when she speaks of traveling she's done and the important people she's met. And yet I've often seen pain in her eyes."

"You're very discerning," Bart said. He, too, had seen brief pain in Fern's eyes. "I've seen no pain in yours."

But there was, she knew. He held back a great part of himself and often she felt a deep bitterness in him. Of his past he was reticent and his cynical remarks on passing people often shocked her. And the question, "Does he love me?" punctuated every thought during the day and night. And often, she knew, there was distress in her eyes because of Miles' detachment. Had she offended him? He did not seem offended; when they met at breakfast and luncheon and dinner, he was gay and friendly. But the closeness she had felt the first two days was gone and she did not know if she were to blame for its passing.

The Napoli docked at Gibraltar early the next morning and the passengers hurried off to scatter over the picturesque little town. Dorian went with Bart. They walked for hours up and down the steep narrow little stone streets, pausing to admire an exceptionally fine view of the Mediterranean, for Bart to take motion pictures, for Dorian to buy perfume and for both to write postcards. When she began to walk slowly, he summoned a horse and carriage. Late in the afternoon they went to a hotel and had tea on the terrace.

Across the table he smiled at her. "This is only the beginning. Next we'll have a night in Monte Carlo."

"This is so lovely I can't believe it's I." And all I feel for you is making it lovelier.

He smiled. "I'd no intention of getting off the ship but because of you I'm a typical tourist, taking pictures, sending postcards bargaining—and looking for a place to have tea."

"All because of me?"

"Yes. Now let's be going. Our ship sails at 5."

Two days later the Napoli docked off Cannes very early in the morning. Dorian awakened Pat.

"We're in Cannes, Pat! Wake up! Every one is going ashore early."

Pat opened her eyes, sat up, and ran her fingers through her tangled blonde curls.

"We're at Cannes? Oh, let me out of here! Robert is going to buy me the place."

Some one knocked. It was Bart. When she went out to meet him, he said, "I'm sorry but I can't go with you today. Some friends came out for me on a yacht. Bob Pelham, who is in business with me in New York, cabled them I was coming and of course I'm supposed to be delighted that they have plans for me. I'm not. But there's no way of getting out of it. I'd ask you to come, too, but you wouldn't enjoy it and you'd miss a good bit of what you want to see, what you came to see."

He would not ask Dorian to come because Barbara Holmes was one among the people who had come for him and he had no wish to include Dorian in a party which also included the temperamental Barbara who had been writing him ardently for three years.

Dorian said, "That's all right, Bart. I understand." But she was keenly disappointed.

When she went into the dining-room for breakfast, neither Miles nor Pat was there. Lynn hurried across the room to her.

"I came to say good-bye, Dorian," Bitting down on her vivid mouth, she said, "Jay is here. He didn't fail me and he's terribly happy to see me. Dorian, thank you—thank you for my life, for giving it back to me. And don't think too badly of me." She held out her hand. "Good-bye, dear. All my best wishes go with you."

She was gone before Dorian could say, "Lynn, don't go with Jay. Go back to your husband."

Buy Lynn, a slim, green streak, was gone.

Miles came in the dining room. His dark eyes were excited.

"Have you seen it? The shoreline, I mean. It's wonderful!" Then he asked, "What are your plans for the day?"

Dorian said simply. "I haven't any. Some people came out in a yacht for Bart. He won't refuse to go with them. Pat's going with Robert. She says he's going to buy her the town. And Lynn—Lynn is gone."

"I know. I saw her. She said good-bye. He caught her eyes and held them. How about running around with me today? We'll get a car, have luncheon in Nice. His heart thumped violently against his ribs.

"If I won't be in the way, Miles."

You—in the way? He wanted to shout the absurdity of it. And looking at her eyes beneath the boyish felt hat, he knew that the layer of ice over his heart had not been very thick.

He grinned. "I think I can stand you."

Often she was to think she had more fun with Miles that day in France than she ever had in her life. They found a car but the chauffeur could not speak English and they drove from Cannes to Nice; they asked questions in incredibly bad French and strained their ears for the faintest swift replies. They were like city children on a picnic, alert, stimulated, curious. They had luncheon in a large hotel in Nice.

HAPPINESS AWAITS CONTEST WINNERS

Pick Your Heart's Desire in Constitution Ad; It's Final Day.

Here's your last "Invitation to Happiness" via the advertising columns of The Constitution! Somewhere in today's Constitution there is an ad which suggests the one thing which would mean bliss to you. Is it a trip, new luggage, flowers, a cottage-by-the-sea, clothes, or an opportunity to help someone more unfortunate than you? Well, perhaps it's none of these. So look through your morning Constitution and find the one item advertised, which seems your very own "Invitation to Happiness."

Clip the ad and write an essay of not more than 50 words telling why that's your choice. Send your entry to the desk of The WIFE SWAPPING IN 1886.

A research worker in the Chicago Historical Society found this item in a newspaper dated November 16, 1886: "A white man was convicted at Chatham, N. C., of 'swapping' wives with another man. He asked the court to impose a light sentence as it was his first 'swap' and besides, he had received only $1.50 to boot."

DR. EVANS TO QUIT AS KLAN WIZARD

"I'm going to walk out under my own power. Whoever's telling you such stuff as that is merely trying to get you to print things that are not facts and stir up some controversy. Then, you'll feel bad, won't you, when you find you have been sucked in like that?"

"Do you mean you are not going to let them throw you out?"

"Don't Print This."

"Yes, I mean that. There is no strife in the Klan. Everything is harmony, I'm going to quit. But, I'm not saying that for publication. I'm not saying for publication what I'm going to do before tomorrow."

"Well, we'll have to print it now."

"Go ahead and print what you want, but remember that I'm not saying anything."

"But, you just said—"

"Yes, I know what I said, but I'm not saying it for publication."

Reports were around that Doctor Evans, in retiring from the Klan as wizard today, will suggest for his successor J. A. Colescott, who came to Atlanta from Ohio two years ago to act as Evans' lieutenant.

Colescott, queried on this, emerged from a room in a downtown hotel where he was in conference with several grand dragons, and said:

"No, I'm not even a candidate. I have not offered. There are several candidates, but I am not one of them. Of course, if the majority of the delegates tomorrow decide that I am the man, then there is no telling what I will do. But I am not a candidate."

Baskin in Line.
The strongest candidate for the wizard's job, according to reports, is J. T. Baskin, of Richmond, Va. He is the man, it was said, that Evans will fight, but Colescott disputed this report last night.

"There are no factional fights," Colescott then went on to discuss what the fight centered around.

"Some believe that we should get to work and stir up some prejudices, fight the minorities that are said to menace this country. My idea, though, is that the man who is in a bad shape in this country right now is the native born, 100 per cent American. Millions of them are out of jobs. We should go to work actively to help the suffering American. Why worry about minorities that amount to nothing?"

"Can't you find some issue to agree on?" he was asked.

"We will agree on one tomorrow."

Ready for New Year.
The secret sessions will be held at the Henry Grady hotel with the triumphant faction starting off a new year trying to revive the Klan with whatever transfusion is found to be violent enough.

The Klan, according to the Klansmen who are left, would not be in this bad shape had not Doctor Evans, in his advancing age, mellowed to a point where he hates no one, loves everyone.

The pre-convention caucuses last night had arrived at no good solution. They swung from one pitch of violent debates to a more melancholy one of long sighs and bleak meditation.

They sat on the edges of beds in hotel rooms arguing, at times, staring at each other, at times, Americanism today faces a real test.

PONCE DE LEON MEN FORM ASSOCIATION

Business and Civic Development of Section Aim of Group.

Organization of businessmen interested in the business and civic development of Ponce de Leon avenue and vicinity was formed yesterday afternoon under the name of Ponce de Leon Civic Association with Walton Reeves, prominent commercial photographer, as its president.

Other officers elected were: Vice president, Harry Richardson; treasurer, Dr. John B. Bennett; sergeant-at-arms, J. T. McEver; and secretary, Hal Yates.

"It is the purpose of the organization not only to promote business in this vicinity, but to render a civic service to this community, which has long felt the need of such an organization," Reeves said. Temporarily the association is to meet every Thursday at 1 o'clock at the 551 Ponce de Leon hotel while definite plans are being formulated.

"Anyone interested in the civic welfare of this section is cordially invited to next week's meeting, at which time we will have a speaker from the West End Business Men's Club."

The following were present at the first meeting: Walton Reeves, Harry Richardson, Dr. John B. Bennett, J. T. McEver, Hal Yates, Rev. Ferguson Wood, Brown, J. B. McGill, L. Whiteman, Dr. A. Dinkler, Dr. Green Jack Wynn, Henry Yates, J. B. Young, J. Ben F. Snow, C. S. Connell, W. O. Burger, J. G. Levin, C. B. Runk, Louis Whiteman and A. C. Loudermilk.

HUCKABEE NAMED TO HEAD BANKERS

Come Calls for Security of Capital as Stimulant to Business.

SAVANNAH, Ga., June 8.—(AP) Georgia bankers elected Herbert Huckabee, of Fort Valley, as president of their state association today and heard a plea for security for working capital, as a means of stimulating business.

"There is nothing that money wishes more than security," declared Donald Comer, Birmingham industrialist. "Give it security and you can have it at the smallest rates of interest. There are billions of dollars today available for one per cent per annum and less."

"Loans to our government, because of the security, are over-subscribed many times and at less than one per cent."

Huckabee succeeds J. T. Haley, of Albany, as president. C. R. Bradford, of Monroe, was elected vice president, and Haynes McFadden, of Atlanta, was retained as secretary. Other re-elections include Freeman Strickland, of Atlanta, as treasurer, and Orville A. Park, of Macon, as general counsel.

REFUSED ENTRY, 96 REFUGEES SAILED

Mexico, Dominican Republic Deny Admission.

HAVANA, Cuba, June 8.—(AP) Ninety-six German Jewish refugees aboard the French steamer Flandre left Havana harbor for France tonight—refused admission both to Mexico and the Dominican Republic.

The sailing was delayed for half hourly intervals while the refugees were canvassed and re-canvassed to learn if they could raise $35,420 bond for entry into the Dominican Republic. They had only $20,000.

Six of the original number of 102, whose Cuban papers were in order, landed here. The others, advised of Cuba's refusal to receive the 907 passengers of the steamer St. Louis, had not expected admission here. The St. Louis now is en route back to Hamburg.

BENDIX BANKRUPT, AIR, AUTO MAGNATE

SOUTH BEND, Ind., June 8.—(AP)—Vincent Bendix, 58, president of Bendix Aviation Corporation, who entered the automotive industry nearly 30 years ago with the first practical self-starter, was formally declared bankrupt today by Referee-in-Bankruptcy Alvin F. Marsh.

Chicago holders of real estate bond issues, which Bendix personally guaranteed more than 10 years ago, petitioned the federal court here May 24 that Bendix be held bankrupt. They contended his liabilities exceeded $3,000,000, and that his assets were less than $500,000.

Reminding the cotton mill men of Administrator Andrews' announced policy of putting the wage-hour law into effect with a slowly-rising minimum wage, Arnold said the 30-per cent increase seemed "unreasonable, uncalled for, and dangerous."

Among others attending the meeting yesterday were T. M. Forbes, W. M. McLaurine, secretary and treasurer of the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association, and Tyre Taylor, counsel for the dissenting southern mills.

DEKALB CHAMBER PLANS FAIR SERIES

Will Sponsor Three-Day Events This Year, in 1940 and 1941.

A series of three-day fairs will be sponsored by the DeKalb County Chamber of Agriculture and Commerce this year and in 1940 and 1941, George Woods, president, announced yesterday.

With elaborate exhibits of live-stock, chickens, canned goods and other county products, the fairs are expected to be the greatest events of their kind ever held in DeKalb.

The first of the series will be held in October of this year in Panthersville. Definite dates have not been set. In 1940 the fair will be held in Chamblee and in 1941 at Tucker. Members of the Future Farmers of America and 4-H Clubs will participate.

Scott Candler, DeKalb county commissioner, is among those interested in promoting the fairs. Others on a special fair committee are Ben Forkner, of Avondale Estates; Professor R. N. Jones, of Panthersville; W. L. Broome, of Tucker; Nelson Severinghouse, of Lithonia; Manget Davis, of Chamblee; Claude Blount, of Decatur; E. P. McGee, county agent, and Miss Sara Weaver, home demonstration agent.

Another committee planning the premium list is composed of McGee, chairman; Miss Weaver, Mrs. J. L. Harper, Dr. C. C. Von Gump, M. A. Thompson, Professor Harold Smith and Professor S. A. Moss.

Democracy Demands Share of All, Swarthmore Dean Tells Georgians

School Should Be a Place for Pupils "To Learn a Way of Life," Speaker Declares at Conference of Vocational Agriculture Educators.

Special to THE CONSTITUTION. COVINGTON, Ga., June 8.—Democracy demands from every individual "a contribution to the common concerns on which depend the stability and progress of the community," Dr. Harold E. B. Speight, dean of Swarthmore College, told vocational agriculture teachers assembled at nearby Lake Jackson today.

"At the same time," he declared, "democracy is a spirit which animates those who are willing to profit by the opportunities of community life and to accept the restraints and obligations of that life."

Dr. Speight described democracy further as "the network of practical relationships, governmental and social, compulsory and voluntary, which supports every person in pursuit of his legitimate private interests."

Education's Functions. In his prepared study, the speaker declared education has two primary functions, and added that "a public system of education must recognize the basic character of both and the importance of each to the other."

One, he said, is training, traditionally viewed as a preparation of the child for the society his elders have created or inherited, but also to be viewed as an equipment of the child for a changing society. The other, he said, is the encouragement of the personal development of the child and youth.

"Training," Dr. Speight said, "involves the means to be taken to gain certain ends. These means cannot be fixed arbitrarily in our changing world, but there are fundamental abilities which can be appropriately developed with reference to the probable opportunities ahead of the individual, and with reference of course to his discovered capacities. The industrialization of our economy makes some few capacities important for almost everyone; local conditions and individual peculiarities will suggest special aptitudes that should be fostered."

Other Resources Needed. "The trained individual, however, needs other resources than vocational skills if he is to be a happy and active citizen and parent and a useful worker in the field of his choice, or in the job which circumstances opens to him. He needs some sense of the ends or purposes which give meaning to what he is doing."

Concluding his address, Dr. Speight declared the school "must be a place where the pupils go, not merely to learn, but to carry on a way of life."

L. A. Wheeler, Foreign Agriculture Service expert for the United States Department of Agriculture, reported reduced export outlets for American agricultural products, and said the "most practical way" of restoring the foreign outlets would be through reciprocal trade agreements.

Reciprocal trade agreements, however, are not a cure-all for our farm problems," he said. They must be supplemented by other efforts in the direction of agricultural adjustment including all efforts that lead toward a reduction in the costs of production and improvements in quality."

Ayers Speaks Again. The third featured speaker of today's session was Thomas L. Ayers, chief of the program operation section of the southern AAA division, who discussed "The International Cotton Picture." Mr. Ayers also spoke at the opening session Tuesday.

Today's panel discussion, on "Regional, National and International Problems of Agriculture," was led by Dr. O. C. Aderhold, professor of vocational education of the University of Georgia, with the following participating: Dr. Wheeler, Mr. Ayers, Dr. Speight, Dr. John J. Tigert, president, University of Florida; Dr. R. H. Montgomery, professor of economics, University of Texas; Dr. O. C. Baker, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, United States Department of Agriculture; Dr. Morris B. Striner, program study and discussion section, United States Department of Agriculture; C. G. Garner, Georgia Agricultural Extension Service; Dr. W. Brooks, president, Georgia Cotton Producers' Association; Atlanta; Thomas H. Quigley, teacher-trainer, industrial education department, Georgia Tech; J. W. Fanning, extension-economist-farm management expert, Georgia Agricultural Extension Service; Robert E. Dennison, professor of economics, Georgia Tech; Dr. George H. King, president, Agricultural Education Association; College; A. O. Duncan, associate professor of agricultural education, University of Georgia; T. E. Ritchie, vocational agriculture teacher, Richland; W. R. Mosley, vocational agriculture teacher, Dalton; and R. L. O'Kelley, vocational agriculture teacher, Watkinsonville.

TEN CLUB HOLDS GEORGIA DINNER

Mary Knight, Author, First Woman Guest in Fifty Years.

Atlanta's Ten Club last night enjoyed a Georgia products dinner and heard another Georgia product, Mary Knight, well-known newspaper woman and author, talk on foreign affairs. Miss Knight is the first woman guest of the club in 50 years of its existence. The dinner was held in a private dining room at Davison-Paxon's with Member Raymond Kline as host. Miss Knight was heard and questioned for an hour before dinner and she had the place of honor at the dinner table.

For the Georgia products dinner came a salad of watercress, tomato, cottage cheese and cucumber appetizer. There followed a tremendous platter of smothered chicken, carefully unjointed and served amid large dumplings and yellow gravy. Baked squash rings filled with green peas and buttered beets were accompanied by parsley-buttered new potatoes. Georgia lettuce and dressing came next and then fresh strawberry and rhubarb pie. And there were corn muffins and rolls.

The next meeting of the Ten Club will be held during the World Baptist convention and Dr. Louie Newton has arranged for some of the world-famous visitors, who will be in the city, to be guests.

11th Annual Kiddie Revue Opens At Grand Today for Week's Run

Performance To Aid Milk Fund for Scottish Rite Hospital.

An eleventh-hour rehearsal last night gave the last touch of perfection to the annual Kiddie Revue opening today at Loew's Grand. The show, in which 150 talented youngsters will take part, will run a week, and will be presented in connection with the current screen show, "Bridal Suite," with Robert Young and Annabella. The unfortunate children at the Scottish Rite hospital will reap the benefits of the show, the proceeds to go toward the milk fund of the hospital. During the one hour the show is scheduled to run, members of the Pi Pi Club dressed as milkmaids will pass around their milk pails for silver contributions from the patrons to aid the crippled children.

The revue this year will be augmented by the co-operation of the North Fulton Girls' chorus, which boasts of some of the more talented musicians in the city, who are going to lend their talent for the performance.

Tap dancing, fancy and acrobatic numbers, and singing skits are all crowded into the one-hour show, with each of the 60 minutes packed with variety, pep, and entertainment. All the children will wear brand-new, colorful costumes. Many are "old-timers" in Kiddie Revue performances.

Dixie Dunbar and Jane Withers are Kiddie Revue alumnae, and with their stage and screen success in view, the youngsters will sing and dance their way through the coming week at the Grand with stardom in view.

Headed for success via the Kiddie Revue are Louise Clayton and L. C. Kidd, who will be among stars taking part in the Kiddie Revue opening today at Loew's Grand.

Parties Galore Will Compliment Woodruff-DuBose Wedding Party

By Sally Forth.

THE vanguard of prominent Atlantans who will be attendants in the wedding of Frances Woodruff and Beverly DuBose Jr. left yesterday for Columbus to attend the round of festivities honoring the betrothed couple, whose marriage will be a brilliant social function of next Wednesday. Accompanied by his groomsmen, Mr. DuBose left early Thursday for Columbus to be present at the dinner given last evening by Charlotte Golden for Frances and her fiancé. The groomsmen include Charles Person, Whitley Butler, Allen Hill, Robert Crawford, Hugh Lester, Julian de Oviar, Gordon Jones, Bolling Jones Jr., Richard Bernard and Hurl Bickstaff, Atlanta boyhood friends of the groom-to-be.

Florrie Guy, who will attend Frances as bridesmaid, leaves today for Columbus, and during her stay there she will be a guest at the home of the bride-elect's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jefferson D. Box. Caroline Reed, of Jacksonville, who will also be one of the bridesmaids, has already arrived for the nuptials and is the guest of Charlotte Golden. Caroline Atkins, of Selma, another bridesmaid, is the guest of Katherine Richards.

The groom-elect's sister, Betty DuBose, who is also numbered among the bridesmaids, leaves tomorrow with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Beverly DuBose, for Columbus. They will be accompanied by the Harrison Joneses and their son, Gordon, and by Mr. and Mrs. Bolling Jones and their sons, Saunders and Bolling Jones Jr. Saunders Jones, of New York, who will attend his nephew as best man, will also arrive in Columbus Saturday for the week-end's nuptial parties.

Mrs. Box will entertain Saturday afternoon at an informal tea for Mrs. DuBose, Mrs. Harrison Jones and Mrs. Bolling Jones, at which time she has invited parents of the bridesmaids and a few close friends to meet the visitors.

The out-of-town guests will be entertained at a dinner-dance by Miss Sarah Hardaway on Saturday evening at "Hardaway Hall," the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Hardaway Jr. Mr. and Mrs. George Woodruff will be hosts at luncheon on Sunday at the Officers' Club at Fort Benning for the visitors.

Headed by Frances and Beverly, the wedding party will motor today to Blue Springs, home of Mr. and Mrs. Cason Callaway, for a spend-the-day party, at which Virginia Callaway will be hostess. Swimming will be the guests' chief pastime, for Blue Springs boasts one of the most picturesque pools in the state. An alfresco luncheon will be enjoyed in the early afternoon before the visitors return to Columbus.

Other parties planned to precede the wedding include a luncheon on Tuesday with Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Woodruff as hosts; a rehearsal party on Tuesday evening to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Clifford J. Swift, and a luncheon scheduled for Wednesday at which Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lumpkin will entertain.

IF PRESENT indications are a forecast of summer activities, then Margaret Winslip is scheduled for a full and enjoyable vacation. This young belle, a prospective debutante for the fall season, is the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Winslip, and trips already planned include sojourns at the beach and the mountains.

Margaret was graduated last week from Gulf Park College in Gulfport, Miss., and soon after her arrival home she departed for Sea Island for a house party. Visits to her parents' home at Tate Mountain Estates will occupy her time for a week before she leaves for St. Louis to visit a classmate, Dorothy Holman. At the same time, a group of classmates from Mississippi and one from Kentucky will also be visiting friends in St. Louis, where the Gulfport students will enjoy a reunion. From Mississippi will be Frances Friler, Evelyn Hood, Sara Gillespie, while Marilyn Mason will go from her home in Kentucky.

A CONGENIAL group of Atlantans will leave tomorrow by motor for Sewanee, Tenn., to attend the graduation exercises at the University of the South, scheduled for Monday. Among those receiving diplomas from this well-known institution will be George Noble Wagon, son of the late Dr. and Mrs. Bert Wagon, of this city.

Included in the group leaving tomorrow for Sewanee will be George's uncle and aunt, Dr. and Mrs. George H. Noble Jr., and children, Paul Avery and Mary Ella. They will be accompanied by their niece, Millie Wagon, and by Mrs. Linton Smith and her daughters, Margaret and Susan.

A number of gay social affairs will mark the commencement week end at the University of the South, with Millie, Margaret and Susan counted among the visiting belles attending these events. By the way, Sally hears that George Wagon plans to follow the profession of his father and his beloved grandfather, the late Dr. George Noble Sr., when he enrolls next fall in the School of Medicine at Emory University.

FOR several summers Mrs. Rosser Little, the former Cora Gantt, has spent a part of her vacation at Sea Island Beach. No wonder when the bride and her groom, Rosser Little, departed last Saturday on their honeymoon that the former suggested a stop at Sea Island. The newlyweds were given a rousing cheer when they entered the Cloister dining room, where toasts were drunk to their health and happiness by assembled friends from crystal goblets filled with sparkling champagne.

Miss Wilson, Fiance Honored at Parties.

Mr. and Mrs. Brooks McCrory were hosts last evening at a buffet supper at their home in the Johnson Estates honoring Miss Martha Wilson and her fiancé, Charles W. Ripley.

Mrs. T. W. Moore assisted the hosts in entertaining. Twenty-four guests were invited.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. LaForge honored Miss Wilson and Mr. Ripley yesterday at an informal luncheon.

Miss Miriam Woodall honored the betrothed couple at a bridge party Wednesday evening at her home on North Decatur road. Eight guests were present.

Society Events

FRIDAY, JUNE 9.

The marriage of Miss Mildred Barnes and George Hudson Phillips takes place at 8:30 o'clock at the Cathedral of St. Philip, to be followed by a reception to be given by the bride-elect's mother, Mrs. Nellie Barnes, on Brittain drive.

Mr. and Mrs. James C. Malone entertain at a buffet supper at their home on Fairview road for Miss Jean Walker and Tully Blacklock, after their wedding rehearsal.

Mesdames Owen Perry, Carl Lewis, Campbell Krenson and H. W. Beers give a luncheon at the Capital City Country Club for Miss Elizabeth L'Engle, bride-elect.

Miss Jean Hicks gives a bridge party at her home on North Decatur road for Miss Mary Snow, bride-elect.

Mr. and Mrs. James C. Wilson entertain at a rehearsal party for Miss Martha Wilson and Charles William Ripley, of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Owen entertain at a rehearsal party at their home on Brookhaven drive for Miss Rosemary Hawk and James W. Simmons Jr., of Anniston, Alabama.

Miss Sarah Gray Rainey gives a bridge-luncheon at her home in Decatur for Miss Nell Scott Earhman, bride-elect.

Mr., Mrs. Harris To Mark Fiftieth Anniversary Today

Of wide interest is the buffet supper planned for this evening by Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Harris at their home on Center street, N. W., in celebration of their golden wedding anniversary.

A marriage ceremony will be performed at 8 o'clock in observance of the date with Rev. J. F. Mitchell, of the North Atlanta Baptist church, officiating. The bride of 50 years ago will wear a model of white shadow lace and her flowers will be Pernet roses. The groom will wear the wedding suit in which he took his marriage vows in 1889.

A number of features will be presented on the musical program, among them being a song, "We Are Still in Love in the Same Old Way," the words and music being composed by Mrs. Louise Thompson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Harris.

After the program a buffet supper will be served and the bridal couple will cut their four-tiered wedding cake to be topped by a miniature bride and groom.

to be given by Mrs. Roy Hendee at her home on Emory road.

Nationality Difference Only Adds to Hazards of Matrimony

It's a Different Bette In the Role of Queen

By Sheila Graham.

HOLLYWOOD, June 8.—"Elizabeth and Essex." . . . Director Mike Curtiz steals some cherries from the plate of Elizabeth the Queen and gives me some (they used to hang people for that). I almost swallow a stone when Bette Davis, the queen, sweeps on the set. . . . "I hardly recognized you," I tell Bette. "I'm delighted," she says. "You're not meant to."

Her make-up is positively amazing. Not a vestige remains of her own eyebrows (all of them plucked out, ouch!) A couple of false ones have been painted on a half-inch above the normal line. Miss Davis' head has been shaved two inches around the hairline. "I look a sight without my red wig," says Bette. "But I'd sooner do it this way than have a built-up forehead and phone nose. That would upset my acting. The hardest part of all," she continues, "is my neck and chest." Both are enameled in white and weighted with pearl necklaces—Elizabeth did this to hide her age—Bette does it to hide her youth.

"After this picture, I'm going away for two whole wonderful months—I'm going to have a real rest," Bette declares. "The 'real rest' is a jaunt to her native New England—"to see some stock plays." Which sounds like a busman's holiday to me.

Essex—Errol Flynn—arrives at this point, says "Hello," and adds that he and Lili celebrate their fourth wedding anniversary June 29. "I bet that's a surprise to all you columnists," he grins—"and here's another. I fully expect to celebrate another four-year anniversary in another four years' time." Errol then tells me that his wife is "a well, intelligent, trustworthy, and I could do a whole lot worse."

Joel McCrea, on the "Career Man" set, tells me how and why he terminated his job with Goldwyn. "My contract was up in September, but Goldwyn had an option for another year. I didn't want to stay with him because of the poor roles he has given me."

"Know Yourself First," Advises Counselor

By Caroline Chatfield.

Dear Miss Chatfield: Being in a terrible quandary I need advice. I am a Jew, madly in love with a Gentile girl. When I am separated from her I am despondent and melancholy and when she is in sight my morale goes up like mercury in the summer. I am satisfied that she loves me as much as I love her but my parents object to my marrying anybody but one of my own race. I'd be willing to wait but I am afraid that I might lose her and if that were to happen I don't think I could go on. Any advice will be gratefully received by a YOUNG MAN IN QUANDARY.

Answer: Of course the grand passion takes precedence over everything else, and if you are not confusing puppy love with the grand passion and the girl smiles on you, racial and religious differences will go by the board. But you do know, don't you, that any sort of separation between a man and his wife adds an extra hazard to the already hazardous business of matrimony? Perhaps it is this knowledge that accounts in part for the strong opposition of parents to their children choosing mates with different backgrounds of race or religion.

In January Atlantic Monthly there's an anonymous article written by a woman, "I Married a Jew." Read it. Also read another in March Atlantic: "I Married a Gentile." While the wife of the Jewish gentleman made a good case for her marriage, there seemed to be a lot between the lines that was at variance with what was on the lines. A considerable lot of whistling through the graveyard, I thought.

Not that these articles will take anybody out of a quandary but that they will give an inkling of the problems and more quandaries which are on the calendars of Jews that marry Gentiles and vice versa.

Dear Miss Chatfield: My parents don't mind my going with boys but my grandmother runs the family business and does all she can to make Dad extra strict on me. She criticizes him for letting me go to a movie on Friday afternoon with a boy—in broad daylight—and now he says no more movies with boys. Just think of it, a 16-year-old girl has to take that! Is it fair?

Answer: No. It isn't fair for Granny to interfere with your family affairs unless there were a real moral issue at stake and your father is weak to permit her to interfere. He should have a heart for your youth and refuse to impose the customs of two generations ago on 1939. Furthermore, he should realize that if his mother's counsel breaks up the peace of his home and breeds discontent between him and his own child, there's the proof that it isn't wise counsel.

Perhaps your mother will take up the cudgel for you and show your father that this is a new day and matriarchs are passe.

EVOLUTION: There was a time when Grandmother was flattered to be called a Matriarch but today she understands that the word carries an implication which is an offense in nostrils of the casual crowd.

MY DAY Washington Dons Gala Attire for Royalty

By Eleanor Roosevelt.

WASHINGTON.—When I bought my newspapers in the Poughkeepsie station yesterday morning, I exclaimed over the news of the shot fired at the Duchess of Kent. How precariously royalty exists! How hard it must be to forget the constant anxiety of those about you! The woman behind the counter, who is an old friend, remarked: "Yes, it certainly is a responsibility to have the King and Queen here. We certainly have to take all precautions."

This was interesting in view of the fact that I feel sure many people would protest violently against the orders reported in New York city that all people on the sidewalks where the parade passes, as it goes to the World's Fair, must stand motionless and all windows must be closed.

On the train, a lady came up to me to say how deeply she was interested in this visit, and with what interest she read my column, to know just what was happening every day. There is no shadow of a doubt in my mind that there are few individuals in any walk of life who are not thinking and wondering about the King and Queen of England. If I needed any further proof, my mail would corroborate this. One of my most amusing letters tells me that on scanning over the menu for dinner at the White House, the writer finds that fish is to be served with a wine sauce which should never be served with that kind of accompaniment. My correspondent may be soothed with the news that the fish course has been eliminated.

Three people I met yesterday asked me just how to greet the King and Queen, if they have an opportunity to meet them. That reminded me of a story told me in the Yosemite about one of the oldest rangers who was with me on a camping trip. Billy Nelson had accompanied King Albert and the Queen of the Belgians when they went through the Yosemite on their visit to the United States immediately after the World War. They were a charming, royal couple and they understood well the real value of human beings. I am sure that one look at Ranger Billy Nelson's face assured them that he was a grand person. He had been carefully coached, however, as to the proper way of addressing royalty. When he stood before King Albert, he forgot everything and, with a reminiscent chuckle, he told me: "I just said, 'Howdy, King,' and held out my hand."

I forgot to mention yesterday that the little village of Hyde Park is all decorated in anticipation of the visit of the King and Queen. Every farmer in the vicinity is praying for rain because the crops need it very badly, but I feel sure that the village officials will be deeply disturbed if the flags and bunting are ruined by any real downpour of rain.

When we reached Washington yesterday afternoon, the decorations had begun to appear even in this sophisticated city, which only puts on its gala attire at the very last minute. I found many questions of procedure on my desk awaiting last-minute decisions.

Smaller Intakes Satisfy In Starch, Sugar Vitamins

By Dr. William Brady.

Men and women who tend to take on excess flesh after the age of 35 can best combat the tendency or control weight by reducing the daily intake of refined carbohydrates and various refined foods. As already explained, carbohydrate is excellent fuel, and when taken too freely it is burned to yield the energy constantly required not only for muscular work but also for the carrying on of the body functions, so that the fat of the body remains in storage, together with the additional fat taken in food.

Unrefined, carbohydrates, eaten as they grow, are less objectionable in the diet of one inclined to be too stout, because the vitamins and minerals that grow with starch and sugar maintain better nutrition and tend to satisfy the hunger appetite or desire for food with a smaller total intake. This effect has been noticed by many persons when they substitute plain wheat, wheat germ and wheat bran in part for the white flour in their diet; also by many on a rational reduction regimen supplemented by suitable vitamin concentrates. Insufficient daily intake of vitamin B, for instance, causes lowering of "tone" in the muscle wall of stomach and intestine, a flabbiness, so to speak, and it requires a larger amount of food to "fill" such a stomach and gives the sense of satisfaction that goes with a full stomach. Vitamin B, complex is present in plain wheat, in wheat germ and in wheat bran; it is removed in refining wheat into white flour.

There is at least 93 pounds of water in a body weighing 150 pounds. The amount of water in the body varies within normal limitations from season to season and with changes in the physical activity and the excretion of the kidneys and skin. Less water is retained in the tissues when the intake of common salt is kept at a minimum. More water is retained in the tissues when an excess of salt is taken, also when an excess of carbohydrate is taken. In the first few weeks of a rational reduction regimen, a little or no loss of weight although the body measurements, if carefully recorded, show a definite reduction. This is due to temporary retention of the water formed by the combustion of fat in the body.

Water weighs more than fat but occupies less space. A little later the body unloads this water rapidly, through the normal excretory channels (kidneys, skin, intestine, lungs) and then the weight begins to diminish in proportion with the grain.

It is a fallacy to assume that any lasting reduction can be accomplished either by drinking less water or by sweating it out. Any change in weight from such methods is a matter of hours or a day—until the water-balance of the body automatically adjusts itself. Reducing or trying to gain weight or just keeping well, it is always a good rule to drink water when you feel thirsty, as much and as cold or warm as you prefer, before meals or after meals or with meals, provided the water is not used to wash down unaccompanied food.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Flaxseed.

Have your book on constipation habit. I use flaxseed, taking it mixed with breakfast cereal, and I find it is all you say, for I never need any medicine at all now. (F. A. P.)

Answer—It is not so much the saving in medicine but the relief from constant irritation of colon, kidneys, pelvic organs of men and women by physical strain. Send a stamped envelope bearing your address and enclose 10 cents coin for booklet "Constipation Habit and Colon Hygiene."

Quinine.

I have what doctors call myotonia. When I try to make certain movements my muscles seem to get stiff and I have to wait until the tenseness passes. (C. H.)

Answer—Many sufferers from myotonia have obtained much relief from taking quinine in moderate doses three or four times daily. Glad to send monograph on "Quinine in Modern Medicine" if you provide stamped, addressed envelope. Write to The Atlanta Constitution and enclose a stamped return envelope.

Side-to-Side Swing Slims Thighs

By Ida Jean Kain.

You can't look like your "old sylvan" in a bathing suit unless your thighs are firm and smooth. This portion of the figure hibernates in conventional clothes for 10 months out of the year but, come summer, you make a quick change into a swim suit—and wish to heaven it were a little longer! Of course, it is true that swimming will fix everything, but without some preliminary work on your figure you may have a hard time persuading anyone to teach you to swim!

The perfect thigh measurement varies from 19 inches for the slight girl to 22 inches for the girl with the large structure. Take the measurement just above the middle of the upper leg—at the largest part. The Hollywood standard for the thigh measurement is three and one-half times the size of the wrist, so the average girl with a six-inch wrist should have a 21-inch thigh.

But, even with normal weight and a perfect measurement, you can have the disfiguring lumps and hollows that go with flabby musculature. Exercise is the only way of keeping this measurement lovely. There's as much of a knack to firming the thigh muscles as there is to firming the hips. It's simple—just a side-to-side swing and it works just as well for bulges as for hollows. Begin with this one:

Position: Lie on the back on the floor, knees flexed and feet together on the floor.

Movement: Slowly and forcibly spread the knees as far apart as possible. Bring them together and repeat 10 times, concentrating on the outward movement, which should originate at the hips. This exercise is easy but it is especially good for developing a smooth inner thighline.

The next exercise includes both the inner and outer thighs and once you get the technique down pat you will have no trouble. Follow the directions carefully.

Position: Sit on the floor and lean back on the left elbow. Have the left leg straight down on the floor but turned outward slightly to bring the soft pad of fat on the side into direct contact with the floor. Flex the right knee with the foot up close to the hip and on the floor. Have the right hand on floor in back of body. All set?

Movement: Bounce! Hoist your left hip off the floor, using the left elbow, left foot and right foot and right hand as levers, and bring it back down on the floor in a bouncing movement, being sure to hit the fat pad every time. Continue for 20 counts and arrange yourself in the same position so that you can bounce on the right hip for the same number of counts.

Woman's Quiz

Q. Why is a leaf vegetable referred to as a "protective food?"

A. The term is used when a food has such mineral and vitamin content that the consumer is protected from nutritional deficiencies which are most likely to occur when diets are composed principally of grain products, meats, sweets and fats.

Q. What are the leading causes of death of children?

A. Causes related to birth are responsible for most deaths of children under 5. Next are pneumonia, diarrhea and enteritis, and accidents. From age 5 to 14, accidents and pneumonia predominate; from age 15 to 19, accidents, tuberculosis and pneumonia.

Q. Should cucumbers be soaked in salt water?

A. That softens them and thus destroys their desirable crispness.

Q. Are there fewer children in proportion to the whole population of the United States now than in the early part of the century?

In 1906, 46 per cent of the entire population was under 21 years of age; in 1930, 41; and in 1935 (estimated), 38 per cent.

Special Cleansing Cream For This Hot Weather

By Lillian Mae

How do you buy cleansing cream? Do you get the cheapest priced cream or the one in the most attractive jar—or do you try to fit your own need, just as you do with face powder?

There really is a cleansing cream now, for every type of skin and every condition, so why not get the one which best fits you for today. Next winter you may need a different one. Which leads me to tell you about a special summer cleansing cream that, naturally, is obtainable only during the hot weather.

Of course, the principal duty of a cleansing agent is to cleanse. Well, this cream does that with a vengeance. It is a light, whipped cream type, and though it isn't what I call a liquifying variety, it melts into the skin immediately and starts its work of deep-pore cleansing, removing stale make-up, dust and perspiration.

In the first place, it is made by a firm whose creams I just naturally adore. They are of the finest and best. Then there is some ingredient added which, when the cream is removed, leaves the skin tingling with a strange refreshing coolness. And instead of being the natural color of creams, it is a very delicate mint-green. Perhaps that has a psychological cooling effect. At any rate, it is a grand cream and an excellent cleanser.

Can't you just imagine yourself using this special summer cleansing cream at the end of a hot, sticky day when you look just about as bedraggled as you feel? Well, it's worth your trying. And it doesn't cost any more than the ordinary cleansing cream. So phone me and I'll tell you what it is and where you may obtain it. If you live outside the city write me, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope for reply.

Simple Rules for Public Speaking

"—And Eleanor Gray will be our national delegate," smiles the club president, announcing election results.

Easy to see why Eleanor is prominent in her club. She doesn't fumble or stammer in accepting office, but knows it's correct to begin with "Mr. President, fellow members—" Clearly she continues, "I deeply appreciate the confidence you've shown in me—"

Posts of honor come your way in clubs, church and civic groups, when you are sure of parliamentary procedure, can talk convincingly.

How it adds to your confidence—when you wish to make a motion—if you know it's correct to catch the chairman's eye by rising slightly, raising your hand.

When he acknowledges you, rise to your full height and speak. Even if you say only a few words you impress others favorably if you speak distinctly. Good practice to read aloud at home, learn to open your mouth when speaking. Tight lips, tight teeth prevent pure full tones.

And here are a few rules to keep you poised, to help you hold your audience when you make full-length speeches.

Keep your weight evenly balanced on the balls of your feet to avoid a slouchy, uneasy posture. Look directly at your audience—

Barbara Bell's Easy Diagram Design

An easy Diagram design (1665-B)—and one of our best! This coat style, fastened at the side, with a narrow roll collar, is almost as slenderizing as a liquid diet, and there's a trim, neat, tailored look about it that you'll like. In fact, you'll doubt enjoy it so much in ginghams, percale and linen for home wear, that you'll want it in flat crepe or polka dot print for run-about, too. The collar and pointed cuffs will look so fresh and cool in snowy white.

The fitting, you see, is all done by means of a few well-placed darts—on the shoulders and at the waistline—that slim in the waist and create just enough fullness over the bust. The patch pocket is a welcome convenience in hot weather, when you must always have a hanky handy!

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1665-B is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 38 requires 4 3/4 yards of 35-inch material and 3-4 yard contrasting for collar and cuffs.

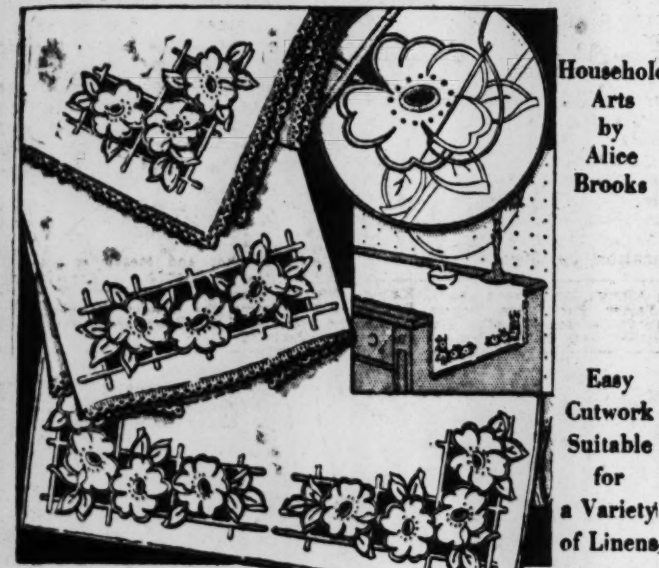

Send for Barbara Bell's spring and summer pattern book! Make your own smart new frocks for street, daytime and afternoon, with these simple, carefully planned designs! It's chic, it's easy, it's economical, to sew your own. Each pattern includes a step-by-step sew chart to guide beginners.

Sweetheart-Shaped Neck—Lillian Mae

You'll be the "prettiest girl there" in this delectable young Lillian Mae frock. And it won't be a budget burden either, for you can make it yourself. The clear explanations of the Sewing Instructor that accompanies Pattern 4166 help even a needle novice to turn out a professional job. Give the well-cut bolero a real dash of Spain by making the revers and collar of bright color to match the sash. Cut the skirt with two front panels for extra, breezy fullness. Then use decorative, button-trimmed tucks on the sleeves and also under the frilly sweetheart-shaped neck, where they will release nice bodice softness.

Pattern 4166 is available in misses' sizes 10, 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 16, dress and bolero, take 4 7/8 yards 39-inch fabric and 5-8 yard contrast.

Send fifteen cents (15c) in coins for this Lillian Mae pattern. Do not send stamps. Write plainly size, name, address and style number.

New Furniture Goes Around In Circles

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

Lady beware—of curves. They're coming back in with a vengeance. But before you throw your diet to the wind, we'd better qualify our remark by adding that the curves refer to furnishings rather than figures.

No Legs.

Round dining tables, for instance, because they're friendly and intimate . . . because they don't take up as much space in a room . . . but mainly because they've been out of style long enough to look fresh and interesting again. The most spectacular round table shown this season has no legs or pedestal. It's suspended from the ceiling by an illuminated column. Among traditional pieces, the semi-circular hunt table is in the fashion picture again—so is the circular sofa. You'll even find round desks and dressing tables.

You Do It With Mirrors.

And round rooms . . . oh, don't worry for fear you're going to have to tear down the place architecturally and build it over. Round rooms can be achieved more simply than that. Such as—by draperies, hung so as to curve the corners off. Or by false wallboard walls to round off the corners. Or by mirrors, for that matter—round off two adjoining corners, then mirror the opposite wall and the circle will seem to be completed, especially if your room seems too small, considering rounding off corners. Even rounding off one corner will help.

Have Confidence in Partner And You'll Play Better Game

By Harold Sharpsteen.

When bridge partners lack confidence in each other's bidding or play, anything is likely to happen during the height of a closely contested game, especially if one or the other chances to be doubled by opponents for penalties. Alert opponents seldom fail to recognize and take advantage of the situation. At times cagey opponents deliberately double one player with hopes of driving the other opponent into a bad rescue contract.

The folly of leaping to the rescue after partner's bid has been doubled for penalties is clearly illustrated in the following deal:

North	South
S-10 6 3	H-8 3
H-K J 8 6 4 2	C-K J 4
S-A K J 4	S-Q 8 7
H-A 8 3	H-9 5 2
D-A 10 3	D-Q 7 5
C-Q 8 7	C-10 9 3 2
South	North
S-9 5 3	H-K J 8 6 4 2
H-K J 8 6 4 2	D-A 10 3
D-A 10 3	C-Q 8 7
C-Q 8 7	S-A K J 4

Both sides vulnerable, West opened the bidding one notrump, North and East passed. South decided to inject a three-heart overcall which at the worst did not look more than one trick short of making with an ace, from partner. West doubled, unmistakably for penalties. West having opened the bidding at notrump.

Blank in hearts, North promptly rescued South with a takeout of four diamonds. South, void in diamonds, rebid to four spades which West again doubled. By this time North was in a panic. "I warned you, partner!" North screamed. "Now take your medicine for I am going to pass and let you play it."

Had North passed West's first double, South would have made three hearts. Furthermore, South's pre-emptive bid of three hearts did not ask North for trump support.

North's club king-jack would present South with a ready-made finesse through West the doubler and notrump bidder.

As it was South was defeated on trick at a contract of four hearts, for a penalty of 200 points. Three spades, doubled, plus the 500 rubber bonus amounted to 680 points profit.

She's Touring Georgia Cities by Airplane

Pretty Martha Hurt, of Atlanta, took off in her plane yesterday as one of the participants in the four-day air tour to the coastal cities. Fifty planes left Candler field at 9:30 yesterday morning, departing at intervals according to their cruising speed rating.

50 Planes in Georgia Air Tour Land at Savannah for Night

Planes Zoom Gaily About State in Perfect Flying Weather; Major Williams Goes 140 Miles in 35 Minutes.

By CARY (CORRIGAN) WILMER

SAVANNAH, Ga., June 8.—Nearly perfect flying weather and nearly perfect flying marked the state of Georgia's fourth annual all-state air tour today which saw a fleet of 50 private planes take off from Candler field this morning and then hit Augusta and Savannah "on the nose" this afternoon without a serious bobble.

Everyone agreed the weatherman gave complete co-operation by providing atmospheric conditions which were little short of ideal. A slight haze kept visibility just below 100 per cent, but there were no complaints.

Smooth as Glass. Not a single accident marred the first day's schedule, but just how "perfect" the flying turned out to be will be determined by the report of the judges on the "navigation contest."

Before starting each pilot estimated the time he would require to complete his two hops. Each was checked out and then checked under supervision of Hubert Duckworth, of the C. A. A. Prizes are to be awarded to the "closest guessers."

The contest committee naturally had no idea that anyone would attempt to use unfair methods, so it was a mere formality when it was insisted that every watch in the party be carefully sealed at Candler field and kept sealed until arrival here.

After all, navigating without a watch is not exactly like navigating with a watch and the competition added interest for both pilots and passengers. Since it placed emphasis on navigation precision rather than speed, the smaller planes had just as good a chance as the larger ships.

Incidentally, there was quite a variation in elapsed times for the first hop from Atlanta to Augusta. The fastest trip was made by Major Al Williams in his 1,000-horsepower Gulfhawk. He zoomed the approximately 140 miles in 35 minutes flat. Many of the smaller craft required about two hours which included a refueling stop at Athens.

It is quite probable the "mosquito fleet" gang had more fun than the "big boys," but it was the "big boys" who stole the show as far as the public was concerned.

This group includes Major Williams, who makes a noise like a fleet of Zeppelins every time he winds up, and also the huge Lockheed Electra of Delta Air Lines, which was entered at the last minute with a full cargo of passengers including C. F. Faulk, Delta president. It is perhaps the biggest plane that ever took part in a Georgia air tour.

The three B's—Beer, Barbecue and Brunswick Stew—and complete informality marked Augusta's contribution to the entertainment program this afternoon with Mayor Richard E. Allen Jr. acting the perfect host.

Perfect Spokesman. W. K. "Generalissimo" Jenkins proved himself almost as perfect as spokesman for the guests by making a 10-second speech to express the appreciation of all concerned. And then the aerial armada took to the skyways once again.

The reception here was equally as cordial and a buffet supper tendered by the Chamber of Commerce brought to a close the first day's program which included only one discordant note.

That was contributed by W. J. "Brother Elk" Stoddard, who made a tremendous amount of noise just before the initial take-off this morning and almost withdrew from the tour because he said he had been "grievously wronged" by a statement in The Constitution this morning.

The statement, based on usually well-informed sources generally agreed to be reasonably reliable, was to the effect that "Brother Elk" vigorously opposed the idea of having 15 of the best-looking girls in Glynn county serve on the entertainment committee for the dinner-dance at Sea Island tomorrow night.

"It's arson," fumed the "Brother Elk." "You can't do that to me."

Queen Uses Her Feminine Wiles In Battle Against a Broiling Sun

Blue Wool Dress Shelved for Shimmering Suit of Mauve Sheer; Ripple of Whispers Notes Daintiness and Prettiness—Like an Apple Blossom.

WASHINGTON, June 8.—(AP)—Pretty Queen Elizabeth put up an obvious battle on her first day here to preserve a proper, queenly daintiness in the face of a broiling sun and muggy air.

And, in spite of her 50 trunks of new ensembles, and the two "dressers" who accompany her, she came off only a shade better than Mrs. John Q. Citizen who sat unashamed on the curb with a shiny nose waiting to see what a Queen really looks like.

That blue wool dress which the Queen was supposed to wear when she met Mrs. Roosevelt was shelved. Instead she stepped off the train in a shimmering suit of mauve sheer. It was ankle length with a bolero jacket, silky fox edging the short sleeves. Tiny, pointed scallops outlined the jacket and the skirt hem. Her off-the-face felt with an ostrich pom-pom, and her suede pumps and elbow-length gloves matched the suit. She carried a bouquet of white and magenta orchids.

She stands very erect. Her figure looks slight, and she is quite a bit shorter than the King. But she has a way of bowing her head very slightly in answer to shouting crowds that gives her an extremely regal air. She has a unique little manner of saluting the crowds when their shouts become extra loud: She swings up her right arm, with the palm turned in, until her hand is as high as her head, and then she shakes the hand back and forth. The crowds love it. And the blue-eyed smile is constant. She seems less shy than her husband, whose smile comes slowly and who half ducks his head as he gazes shyly at cheering throngs.

To the hand-picked hundred or so who stood about 20 feet away from the royal party as it descended, the Queen seemed to glow with the freshness of an apple blossom. There was a ripple of whispers as she stepped off the train, "Oh, she is pretty," "Isn't she dainty?" "Why, she's thinner than her pictures."

But some of the feminine members of the party that were introduced in the President's waiting room thought they had an answer: The Queen had prepared herself for Washington's broiling sun by a very feminine dodge: She had put on a thick coat of liquid powder. There was a slight tinge of rouge and lipstick.

Three penguins from the temperate coast of Chile have been brought to Florida for exhibition.

Cow of Natty Spring Beige Shade Missing

Missing—one beige cow. Yes, beige. At least, that's how the cow was described to police yesterday by its owner, Mrs. Virgil Jones, of 714 Spring street. She said the animal was gone from the back yard when she went to milk it.

(Editor's Note: The ladies hereabouts say beige is a "sort of grayish tan.")

Georgians Seek Shade and Breeze As June Heat Drives Mercury Up

Tough Mules Even Collapse in Abnormal Weather; Occasional Thunderstorms Today May Offer Scattered Cool Breathing Spaces.

With tough Georgia mules collapsing and dying in the abnormal June heat, Georgians themselves have begun the annual search for shade and a breeze to help them through what is beginning to look like a long, hot summer.

Today, the United States Weather Bureau has said, will be partly cloudy, with the thermometer not high temperatures of the last few days have caused the death of more than 30 horses and mules on Laurens county farms, and sunstroke has put as many more out of commission for the rest of the season.

Recent heavy rains hindered Dublin farm work, and the stock had been plowed harder than usual in an effort to catch up, he said.

Meteorologist George W. Mindling stated that his office had received readings in the high nineties from several Georgia cities in the last two days. The readings, he said, are a good bit above the June average.

Commentator Stops Here

KALTENBORN HERE, QUIETS WAR FEAR

Claims U. S. Could Best Aid With Supplies; Criticizes Airport.

There will be no war in Europe—at least not until Hitler commits some overt act which the democracies cannot permit to go unchallenged.

Russia and Britain will eventually sign a pact calling for mutual protection.

The United States can be of more assistance—if there should be a war—by selling equipment and supplies to European countries for cash as long as they can pay for it, and then on credit—than she would be in sending in shipments of soldiers to fight.

Short War Seen.

If there is a war it will be of short duration—not over 18 months—because the fighting nations—particularly the dictator nations—will exhaust themselves and the combatants thereafter would drift into a wearing down struggle such as is now going on in China.

The visit of King George and Queen Elizabeth to the United States is simply crystallizing the already friendly relations between Britain and this country and, while helpful, was not necessary to illustrate the ties between the two nations.

Chamberlain is an old and dawning man, who prefers business and fishing to international complications and has no stomach for war. His appeasement policy is thoroughly discredited and the British need as a prime minister a man like Churchill, who would pound the table and talk to the Germans in a manner they understand.

These were the essential remarks of H. V. Kaltenborn as he spent 20 minutes in the Atlanta airport offices of Delta Air Lines yesterday morning en route from Savannah to Baton Rouge, where he spoke last night to the Junior League. He had addressed the Georgia Bankers in Savannah on Wednesday.

The dynamic 61-year-old commentator who talks to 10,000 people and who formerly was an editorial writer for a Brooklyn newspaper, took time out between his thoroughly positive remarks about world affairs to edge in a question or two at his interviewers about when Atlanta is going to improve her airport facilities.

Piecemeal Work.

"I've been coming here for the past four years and always they seem to be doing work in piecemeal. I wonder when the airport really will be enlarged to accommodate the travel requirements? You have a great and strategic location, and something should be done about your airport," he said. Asked by a reporter, "Where do you get the background for all your comments?" Kaltenborn replied, "I've accumulated that over 40 years. I read everything and I use my eyes and ears and keep my contacts. I'm simply a glorified newspaper reporter."

$100,000,000 PROPOSED AS SMALL BUSINESS AID

WASHINGTON, June 8.—(P)—Senator Hill, Democrat, Alabama, proposed in a bill today that a $100,000,000 business finance corporation be set up with Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds to encourage the expansion and development of small business.

Senator Bankhead, Democrat, Alabama, introduced a bill which would provide for the reimbursement of cotton co-operative associations for losses occasioned by operations of federal stabilization programs.

CHICAGO, June 8.—(P)—Federal income tax liens totaling $628,707.71 were filed today against John (Jack) Guzik, one-time "business manager" of the Al Capone gang, by Internal Revenue Collector Carter H. Harrison.

SCHOOL TO AWARD DIPLOMAS TONIGHT

Booker T. Washington Exercises at City Auditorium.

Four hundred and fifty graduates of Booker T. Washington High school will receive certificates and diplomas at commencement exercises at the city auditorium at 9 o'clock tonight. Dr. Willis A. Sutton, superintendent of city schools, will preside at the exercises.

The address to the graduates will be delivered by Ed S. Cook, president of the board of education, who also will present diplomas. Prizes and scholarships will be awarded by C. L. Harper, principal of Booker T. Washington.

A program of musical selections will be presented by the school glee club and members of the graduating class.

AIR BASE IS SOUGHT FOR FORT BENNING

COLUMBUS, Ga., June 8.—Columbus has put in its bid for the projected southeastern army air base or depot for Fort Benning in a telegram sent by Walter A. Richards, president of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, to Senators George and Russell and Representative Pace.

Mr. Richards, in asking that the base be located at Fort Benning, cited the ideal location and the advantages that would accrue in having it at the fort.
